The Charleston and Esmeralda at Acapulco.

BOTH ARE READY FOR A FIGHT.

No News From the Itata Rumors that She Has Gone South the Chilians Will Interpose to Prevent Her Capture

WASHINGTON, May 16. The navy department this afternoon received a dispatch announcing the arrival of the Charleston at Acapulco. The dispatch states that the Esmeralda, a war ship of Chile, was also in port, but gave no information as to the whereabouts of the Itata. The Esmeralda, it is stated, is badly in need of coal, and it is thought probable that the Mexican government will be asked to allow the Esmeralda to remain at Acapulco. Her only object in remaining in port is the desire of the Chilean officers to communicate with the Itata and relieve her of her cargo.

No information can be obtained at the navy department in regard to the further movements of the Charleston. She will, it is thought, remain in the vicinity of Acapulco and wait for the Itata to make her appearance. Considerable speculation is also going on as to what action the Esmeralda will take in case the Itata makes her appearance and the Charleston endeavors to capture her. Some say that the Esmeralda is in no condition to fight and will not attempt it. It is said by others, however, that it is a case of life and death with the Esmeralda and that she will surely fight in case the Charleston tries to capture the Itata. Further developments in the case are daily looked for, and to by state and naval officials.

A cablegram was also received at the navy department this afternoon announcing the arrival of the cruisers San Francisco and Baltimore at Iquique.

An Exchange of Guards.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 16.—A telegram from an officer on the Charleston, at Acapulco, says that the Itata had not been seen or heard from at 3 a. m. When the Charleston entered the harbor she passed near the Chilian war vessel Esmeralda. The Charleston went to quarters and loaded her battery for an emergency. The Esmeralda speaks all vessels she meets. Two days ago she attempted to buy coal at Acapulco but failed to get any because of a lack of coin. Soon after the Charleston anchored the Esmeralda steamed into port and Captain Remy had an interview with her commander. The latter said frankly that the Charleston would never take the Itata until the Esmeralda was sunk. Captain Remy replied that his orders were to take the Itata and it would make no difference if the Esmeralda was in Acapulco or not. The Charleston is ready for action, as every one expects a fight if the Itata appears.

LATER.—It is rumored that the Esmeralda at sea communicated with the Itata to-day and that the latter steamed south after receiving provisions from the Esmeralda.

The Charleston Heard From.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 16.—The cruiser Charleston is reported as having arrived at Acapulco this morning.

A Report of Capture.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 16.—A dispatch from the City of Mexico says that it is rumored that the Itata has been captured by the Charleston off the coast of the state of Jalisco and that she is now returning with her prisoner toward San Diego. It is impossible to verify or deny the rumor. The man-of-war reported flying no colors and lying off the coast of San Blas, on investigation, proved to be a coastwise steamer. Its captain has seen no vessels of a suspicious character.

More Doubtful Information.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 16.—The captain of the steamer Newburn, which arrived at this port at midnight last night, reported that on his way down the coast she met the Chilian war ship Esmeralda, at Cape St. Luis and spoke with the officers of that vessel. After leaving the Esmeralda, which proceeded north, he passed, some time during the night, a vessel supposed to be the Chilian war ship Imperiale, also going north. On his return trip he reports seeing none of these vessels. The captain further stated he is of the opinion that the Esmeralda and the Itata put into Magdalena Bay, where the cargo could have been transferred without any trouble, and the Charleston might have sailed by while this transfer was being made.

No Coal Furnished.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 16.—The published rumors to the effect that the Esmeralda succeeded in buying a limited supply of coal at Acapulco are denied by the government. The officials say she was ordered out of the port and now lies in neutral waters. The Esmeralda's steam launch was patrolling all last night. The impression prevails at Acapulco that the Itata has passed and gone south and that the Esmeralda is waiting for the Charleston. The telegraph at Acapulco has been busily used by the officials of the Chilian warship.

A Warship Returns.

NEW YORK, May 16.—The United States cruiser Philadelphia, with Admiral Gherardi on board, arrived in the harbor this morning, coming come from St. Thomas. During the trip Flag Lieutenant Alan G. Paul died. The remains were brought here for interment. The dead officer was a brother of Mrs. William Waldorf Astor. While at Port Au Prince President Hippolyte paid the Philadelphia an official visit. An episode of the visit was the action of the commanding officer of the British warship Pilades, who took himself away to avoid saluting the president. The Philadelphia fired a salute and its officers received the president with great respect.

The Situation in Chili.

NEW YORK, May 16.—Mr. Edward Eyre, a nephew of ex-Mayor William R. Grace, has arrived on the steamship Colon from Aspinwall. Mr. Eyre is a representative of the house at Callao and this is his first visit home in twenty-four years. Speaking of the revolutionists, Mr. Eyre was asked:

"From what source do the insurgents obtain funds to continue the warfare?"

"They have secured control of all the ports to which nitrate is shipped, they receive the export duties payable to the Chilian government, which amount to fully [illegible] dollars annually."

"How does Balmaceda get the funds to carry on the warfare?"

"From the general revenues of the country, principally the customs houses of Valparaiso and Talcahuano, but as these are not sufficient to meet his expenditures he issued $[illegible] worth of paper money, which was taken by the people and dealt to pay the army. The currency of Chili consists of 'vales' issued and guaranteed by the government. This currency was worth fifty cents on the dollar when the revolution broke out, but according to my last advices had declined to thirty cents."

"Do you know many firms in New York that are supplying the insurgents with arms?"

"No, I do not."

"How long do you think the struggle will last?"

"It is very hard to say, but I am afraid it will last for many months as the opposition is not likely to accept as a solution of the difficulty the man who Balmaceda proposes shall succeed him as president, (Senor Vicuna,) when his term expires on September 18th next."

"The question of credit of Chili with foreign nations?"

"Chilian bonds have declined a little owing to the revolution, but not to the extent that might have been expected. Chili has enjoyed such an excellent reputation that the effect has not been in the case as it would have been in other states. Her total debt is only about $[illegible] which is, no doubt, at any rate perfectly good."

"If necessary, could Chili get any financial assistance from London in the way of loans?"

"Under present circumstances it is not at all likely that she could obtain any assistance in the London market, but in normal times she could have had all the money she desired for public works and other uses. Her last loan, which was a million pounds sterling, was placed at Valparaiso at par to yield seven per cent. I believe it was taken up and subscribed 1-11 principally by the Rothschilds."

"What steps are taken by the Chilian government to prevent the sale of arms to the Balmaceda party?"

"In fact the government has taken every possible step to prevent the sale of arms to the Balmaceda party. The government has also exercised the strictest neutrality, and I know positively that that is the policy which the Peruvian government proposes to follow. This I can affirm, as I have it direct from the president of Peru and his ministers. What the commerce of the coast needs is peace, and the unanimous feeling is one of the deepest regret that Chili should have become involved in such a condition of internal strife."

A Town Burning.

PITTSBURG, May 16.—A Meadville, Pa., special says: At 11 o'clock this morning a call for our fire department and steamer was made from Linesville, twenty miles west of this city, saying a furious fire was raging in that town. A special train bearing our steamer and one of Meadville's fire companies was soon on the road to Linesville. At noon the fire was threatening the whole town, and store after store was being wiped out, as a fierce wind was blowing. The special train arrived there at noon and the fire companies began battling with big odds against the flames.

After the arrival of the Meadville firemen the flames were confined to one building and were soon under control. Daniel Fowler, a Meadville fireman, fell from a veranda and sustained a compound fracture of the ankle. Four stores and three dwelling houses, all wooden buildings, were consumed. The losses are estimated as follows: McLean & Schanack, hardware, $20,000, small insurance; H. M. Hughes, dry goods, $28,000, small insurance; Cram & Allen, monuments, $1000; J. H. Lawrence, dwelling, $600; A. M. Fenner, building and billiard room, $700; D. Foth, house, $900; Laubly & Bowman, groceries, $4000, insurance $1500; G. C. Schanack, residence, $1000. The loss to the Bowman and Rankin blocks and contents is about $4000. The fire started in the basement of McLean & Schanack's hardware store and was caused by the explosion of gasoline.

A Dangerous Fire.

JACKSON, Mich., May 16.—Fire broke out in the old Kennedy mill west of the Michigan Central depot shortly after midnight and gave the people a great scare for the safety of the town. The mill buildings were burned and the flames swept toward the Hurd block, the business centre with a fury that seemed resistless. The blacksmith shop of John Blanchard, the wagon factory of Samuel S. Bigeler and the carriage shop of Scott S. Bigeler, in the same building, caught fire. The flames spread to J. Prescott & Sons' livery barn, then to Adler's bottling works and barns near the bridge, where the firemen stopped the fire.

The losses are not yet known, but will probably amount to $10,000 with a fair amount of insurance. Cause unknown.

A Frightful Conflagration.

MUSKEGON, Mich., May 16.—A frightful conflagration swept over this city this afternoon, destroying sixteen squares of business blocks and dwelling houses, entailing a loss of from $500,000 to $,000,000, about one-half insured. The court house was among the buildings destroyed. It cost $40,000 and was insured for $40,000. Hundreds of people were made homeless, but are amply provided for.

Further Details of the Fire.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., May 16.—A special to the Democrat from Muskegon says:

This city suffered a second visitation from flames this evening. The fire started at 6:30 o'clock in the Langakella hotel barns, just off Pine street, from some unknown cause, and, aided by a strong wind, spread ten blocks up Pine street, one of the principal business streets of the city. Then by a sudden shift in the wind the flames were driven toward Terrace avenue, one of the finest residence streets in the city, where they raged unchecked for some time. Twenty-two blocks are devastated as if swept by a hurricane of fire. Pine street business houses for ten blocks are entirely wiped out.

The $100,000 court house was gutted, but its public documents were saved. Prisoners in the county jail who occupied the basement of the court house were liberated. A little child sleeping in the Langakella barns, where the fire started, is missing.

By 9 o'clock the fire had reached the southern district of the city. Here there is more space between the houses and the firemen succeeded in considerably reducing further progress of the flames.

As the high buildings burned there was great danger from flying firebrands. Two Grand Rapids engines were put to work as soon as they arrived.

The total number of dwellings burned may safely be put at 350. A conservative estimate places the total loss at $500,000. Total insurance unobtainable. Many of the burned places have no insurance. Hundreds of families are thrust upon their friends for accommodation.

Hundreds of women and children are wandering homelessly along the streets, moaning and wringing over their losses. If the city authorities do not immediately open hotels into use and make some arrangements to house the houseless extreme suffering will certainly follow.

The President Is at Work.

WASHINGTON, May 16.—The president resumed his official duties at the White House place to-day. He was at his desk from 9 o'clock until 6, with the exception of an hour for lunch, and a portion of this time was spent in the cabinet room shaking hands with a party of Democrats from Pennsylvania. He disposed of considerable routine business during the time and had conferences on important official matters with Attorney General Miller, Secretary Tracy, Secretary Foster, Assistant Secretaries Moore, Grant, Chandler and Spaulding, of the state, war, interior and treasury departments respectively, Senators Hawley and Morrill and Mr. John W. Foster, who had just returned from a special mission to Spain.

Chinch Bugs Appear.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 16.—A dispatch from Atchison, Kan., says that Joseph McCrum, who has 800 acres of wheat in Osborne county, has received a letter from his agent stating that that section has had no rain of any consequence for a month, and that the chinch bugs are doing great damage. Third are patches of six or eight acres in wheat that have been completely killed.

A Big Wheat Crop Assured.

HOPKINSVILLE, Ky., May 16. Specials received by The News from fifteen points in the Arkansas valley indicate that all winter wheat in Kansas is having a fine soaking rain. It started in about 6 o'clock [illegible] Saturday. Xolo [illegible] stop the [illegible]

DISAPPROVED.

The Supreme Council Will not Give Endorsement.

SWITCHMEN MUST GO ALONE.

Trainmen and Firemen Support the Companies while Conductors Support the Switchmen—Endorsement of the Northwestern's Action.

CHICAGO, May 16.—After a session which lasted from 10 o'clock this morning until 6 tonight the council of the United Order of Railway Employes, which includes approximately the grievances of the Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association against the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company, adjourned to-day. During the session of the council there were differences between the company and the employes, the former being very positively opposed to the reinstatement of the switchmen who had been discharged, and the employes being equally positive in their efforts to escape and many were severely criticised upon the floor of the council. The people brought down a very cool reception to-day from the rapidly forming crowds. The most outside, realizing the extent of their depredations, escaped. A number of the participants are known, however, and several arrests were made today.

A Monument for Jefferson Davis.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., May 16.—John A. Childress and Patrick Wallace, of this city, and John Weber, of Charleston, S. C., issue to-day a circular letter to the southern people in which they explain that the fund intended for a monument to Jefferson Davis has ceased to receive contributions, and call for a general movement throughout the south, fixing the date of June 18, 1891, when the people of every town and county shall meet and take proper steps to forward the enterprise by voluntary contributions or other methods which they may deem best. Remittances are to be sent to Mr. Weber at Charleston.

The letter says: Among all the noble dead there is none whose name appeals with greater power to the affectionate remembrance of the southern people. The cause for which he fought and suffered has been buried forever, but there is no sentiment of honor or patriotism which requires us to bury the memory of those whose blood was shed for it. Southern people will have lost every honorable sentiment when they forget him who for their sake wore the shackles upon his wasted limbs.

Peculiar Extradition Case.

WASHINGTON, May 16. Barrister J. H. Pillett, of Montreal, was at the department today in conference with Assistant Secretary Moore on a very peculiar extradition case. Some time ago the husband of Leda La Montaigue was murdered by her her brother and Leda was an eye witness of the crime. When her brother was on trial Leda refused to testify. Leda was acquitted of any complicity in the crime and went to Boston, where she secured employment.

On August 2 a warrant for arson was issued against Leda, under which she was extradited and placed in jail at Sherbrooke, Canada. The brother will be convicted without the woman's evidence and will be hanged. The lawyer claims that the woman, instead of being tried for arson was sentenced to one year's imprisonment for contempt of court in refusing to testify against her brother and therefore her imprisonment is illegal and that she should be liberated.

Mr. Pillett is also in consultation with Sir Julian Pauncefote on the case.

She Broke Up the Meeting.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 16.—Mrs. Mary A. Howland was defendant to day in a suit for divorce brought by her husband, the Rev. H. E. Howland. Mr. Howland is in charge of the Wayside mission out on High street and the women of his flock filled the court room, the jurors' chairs being at a premium. The Rev. Mr. Howland said Mrs. John L. Sullivan was a member of his flock at Centreville and his wife was evidently jealous of her. Once in his sermon, he had used this expression: "I hope to meet you all in heaven," when his wife scandalized the whole congregation by shrieking shrilly "Did your mother tell you to meet Mrs. John L. Sullivan in heaven?" The remark broke up the service.

Judge Wilbur adjourned the hearing until next Saturday.

More Trouble in New Orleans.

NEW ORLEANS, May 16.—Mayor Shakespeare was called upon yesterday by Henry Peters, a stevedore, who complained that the Provenzano brothers were interfering with his business and intimidating the men he employed. The mayor at once sent for both Joseph and Peter Provenzano. Joe put in an appearance this morning. He was subjected to a severe lecture by the mayor, who informed him among other things that interference in Peter's affairs must be stopped, that his gang had caused enough trouble, that the police had been instructed to use every means in their power to prevent him and his gang from annoying citizens, and that the reign of terror must cease.

International Electrical Exhibition.

BERLIN, May 16.—The international electro-technical exhibition was formally opened today in Frankfort-on-Main in the presence of a vast audience. An address, reviewing the work of his associates, was delivered by Director General Hult Von Muller. The exhibits were divided into twelve classes. Telephones are connected with the great opera houses in Frankfort, Munich and Wiesbaden, as well as with concert halls in distant cities, and every evening visitors will be enabled to hear music of the best artists. All sorts of electrical devices are on exhibition. A prominent feature is the electric street railways.

An Exciting Race.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 16.—There was the largest crowd since Derby day at Churchill Downs to-day. The weather was warm and pleasant and the track was too dusty to be fast. H. Zover, of St. Louis, was ordered off the track for an alleged bribe to withdraw Linlithgow in the first race yesterday and left the course with his horses this morning. The feature of the day was the running of Comedy and Ed Leonard in the third race, which proved the most exciting. They ran a dead heat for first place. It was run off and resulted in another dead heat.

National Railway Conductors.

ST. LOUIS, May 16.—The National Order of Railway Conductors this evening elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Wm. B. Daniels, Cedar Rapids, Ia., grand secretary and treasurer; A. B. Garretson, Denison, Tex., grand senior conductor; T. B. Harte, St. Louis, grand junior conductor; J. Morlen, West Fairham, Que., grand inside sentinel; W. E. Melader, New York, outside sentinel; D. J. Dorsey, Winnipeg, member of executive committee; J. H. Lalinger, Atlanta, Ga., member of grand committee. No other business of importance was transacted and the convention adjourned until Monday.

Russian Finances and the Jews—Tin Plate Market Overstocked—Influenza Victims—The Spanish American Treaty—Bismarck's Advice.

[Copyright 1891 by the United Press.]

LONDON, May 16.—The British public have seen enough to convince them that the events this week and the course of the immediate future promise to be more sensational than those of the past. From Russia and Argentine blows are directed at the financial stability of England. Portugal threatens to on the eve of a revolution that may result in a republic and British interests in South America are seriously menaced by the sudden decisive attitude of the United States toward the congress party in Chili. The Russian withdrawal of gold is the most ominous finger, for no one doubts that the finance minister, Vishnegradski, who has been for several years has been one of unintermitted success, and who is at present all-influential with the czar, will exert all his power to punish the nation which most befriends the Rothschilds and which has assumed the championship of the persecuted Jews. A St. Petersburg letter says the Vishnegradski was amazed at the withdrawal of the Rothschilds, for the first time in the history of that family, from an agreement almost completed with an European power for the floating of a loan, and that the finance minister expressed himself in strong terms to the Rothschilds' agent at the Russian capital. He declared in effect that the Rothschilds had no business with the internal policy of Russia, and that interference with that policy would be met by evidence of Russia's ability to retaliate in a way that would prevent such insolence in the future. Leading bankers of St. Petersburg, known to have Rothschilds connections, have been given notice to wind up their business and leave the empire, and it is said that Vishnegradski proposes as a triumph of his administration to convert the four and one-half per cent. loans without exterior assistance. As the credit of the empire is excellent and its resources abundant, a three per cent loan of 6,000,000 francs ought to find a ready market among European capitalists. It is also stated that Vishnegradski has sent for export already in France, with the view of adopting the French practice of investing the savings of the people, instead of dealing with syndicates. This would have been impossible in Russia a decade ago, but is entirely possible to-day. Meantime England must prepare to see a current of gold flowing from London to St. Petersburg, and to meet the drain as best she may.

North as well as South America is contributing to England's financial bluneder. One of the most important international complications in England is the Alliance Investment Company, Ltd., of which Lord Cull is the leading director. His lordship reports that "the depreciation of many of their investments, owing to what had occurred in the United States and South America, had been very considerable, but he did not think that a better account could be or had been made by any other trust company." His lordship alluded, so far as the United States was concerned, to the recent agrarian agitation in the west. He made the significant admission, in showing the wholly disastrous possibilities of the Argentine collapse, that "there was a sort of an idea that the directors had not been wisely advised in investing in Argentine securities at all, but he did not know any trust company which had not done so."

Interviews have been obtained with a number of Welsh tin plate-makers in regard to the impending stoppage of production during July. They declare that the effect of the shut-down will not be to raise prices. The American market, they say, is overstocked at present, and the supply on hand is sufficient to meet all demands for a long time to come. When the normal relation between supply and demand is restored, production can be resumed, and the manufacturers expect to then see the American trade regain its former proportions.

The extended wintry weather in Russia, according to advices from St. Petersburg, has caused a marked increase in the prevalence of the influenza, and a fresh wave of the dreaded malady may be looked for to the westward as a result of this unfortunate change in the weather. The cold snap in England has carried off a large number of influenza patients, who were hovering between life and death when the climatic change occurred. There is much anxiety in regard to Mr. Gladstone's condition. The distinguished sufferer is reported to-night as hardly holding his own. The Bishop of Lincoln has ordered the prayers in the churches of his diocese for an abatement of the epidemic. Business is much interfered with by it. The cotton mills of the Fletchers have been obliged to shut down, a majority of their employes being ill from the same cause.

There is a vigorous teetotaler and radical outcry over the fact that on the occasion of the queen's approaching visit to Derby the publicans are to be allowed to keep their houses open later than ordinary. The temperance people declare that this is an outrage on decency, all the worse for being undoubtedly known to her majesty. The same protesters assert that this is not an isolated case of its kind, but that it is notorious that the celebrations attended by the queen always fill the streets with drunkards.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says that a favorable report on the condition of the exiles in Siberia has been sanctioned by the senate and will be presented to the czar.

The French radical newspaper Le Prolétaire has been excluded from circulation in Alsace-Lorraine, where it has hitherto had many subscribers.

The widow and son of a mine inspector of Dortmund, who died unexpectedly a short time ago, have been arrested on suspicion of causing his death. The evidence in the hands of the police is said to indicate that Kraus was murdered for the sake of an inheritance.

The construction of an electric subway railway will be commenced in Berlin shortly. The road will resemble in its leading features the new London underground electric railway, which has proved so successful.

THE BERLIN LETTER.

Recent Facts and Opinions from the German Capital.

[Copyright 1891 by the New York Associated Press.]

BERLIN, May 16.—The negotiations for a German-Austrian commercial treaty with Spain have become curiously involved with the celebrity contention displayed by General John W. Foster, the special representative of the United States. The German embassy at Madrid, which ought to be rightly informed, sends a dispatch to the effect that the "your packers" agreed with the Duke of Tetuan, the Spanish minister of foreign affairs, a month ago, have now said. The Duke of Tetuan received assurances for a thirty-[illegible] duty favorably, and told the German minister that he had to make this concession [illegible] ally on the principle of reciprocity so far as compatible with a protection policy, and that as soon as France shall promulgate her new tariff the government will place before the cortes a general tariff, on which shall be based the convention. [illegible] reason to the United States has been known. This renders difficult any treaty with the European powers. Spain has agreed to give America imports under [illegible] and Porto Rico a differential rate of 25 per cent. against similar imports from all other countries, whether or not they conclude treaties with Spain. Such a privilege, constituting a customs union between the United States and the Spanish Antilles, looks further to extinction when the German embassador has [illegible] Austria-Hungary and Portugal. Spain has been invited to send a delegate to the customs conference at Vienna, where a modification of the duties ought to be [illegible] Spain [illegible] great present development of the interests between the two countries. Much Spanish merchandise is coming through Belgium and Dutch ports. Mercury, corks, fruits, oils and wines, which form the Spanish staples are now largely imported. The German trade with the Antilles is not of great importance, but the formation of a treaty recognizing exclusively American privileges is hardly possible. The Madrid government is [illegible] Kingdom takes a similar view of the matter. The Spanish commission appointed to formulate a tariff has not concluded its report and it will probably be a month before it is ready to receive declaratory negotiations to be made.

The surrender of the majority of the upper house in the income tax dispute is undoubtedly due to Herr Miquel's skillful handling of the matter. At one time the majority offered opposition to the democratic measure which levies a tax of 4 per cent. on incomes of over 10,000 marks, but Herr Miquel guided them into submission. The emperor has written him a warm congratulatory letter.

The press is discussing a pamphlet, supposed to have been inspired by Prince Bismarck, assailing the emperor's tendency toward absolutism. The pamphlet argues that the ministers alone ought to be responsible and that the sovereign ought specially to avoid rhetorical declarations as in the proportion that his fallibility becomes obvious will respect for him suffer.

Russian Jews in England.

LONDON, May 16.—Another large contingent of indigent Hebrews have arrived here. The Russian Jews here are increasing in number and in importance. Each of the steamers of one line plying regularly three times a week between here and Hamburg is bringing a full complement of Russian Hebrews as passengers. The Hebrews are also arriving here in large numbers by other lines. With the exception of a few who are going to the United States, all these new arrivals expect to settle in London or Manchester.

A Slight Relapse.

LONDON, May 16.—Mr. Gladstone is reported by his physicians to have experienced a slight relapse to-day. Though his illness is not regarded to be not serious, his failure to rally under the careful treatment he is receiving causes increasing anxiety to his innumerable admirers and friends. Bulletins of the venerable statesman's condition are eagerly looked for in all the cities of the kingdom.

Blaine's Health.

NEW YORK, May 16.—Dr. Dennis was at the residence of Mrs. Damrosch at 9 o'clock this morning. After the physician had paid a visit to Secretary Blaine he gave out the following: "Mr. Blaine had a very good night and is free from pain this morning. He seems much better, and while his feet are much swollen, the attack of gout is subsiding, and in a few days he ought to be able to be up and about. He ate a good breakfast this morning and seems very comfortable."

At 9 o'clock this evening Dr. Dennis issued the following bulletin relative to the condition of Secretary of State Blaine: "Mr. Blaine has passed a most comfortable day, spending most of the time on a lounge. His condition is so much improved that I do not intend to visit him to-morrow. His improvement is satisfactory, and in a few days he ought to be able to leave the city. During the day he has suffered no pain and his appetite is good."

Heber Newton Accused of Heresy.

NEW YORK, May 16.—The charges brought by Father Ignatius against the orthodoxy of the Rev. R. Heber Newton, D. D., rector of All Souls' parish of this city, have resulted in bringing out a petition to Bishop Potter of New York requesting that an inquiry be instituted to ascertain the truth of the rumors respecting the teachings of the reverend gentleman. The two points in Dr. Newton's teachings that are to be submitted to the bishop are his alleged denial of the miraculous conception of Christ and of the resurrection of the human body of Jesus.

The petition is signed by nearly all of the high dignitaries of the Protestant Episcopal church in the diocese, and forces the bishop into a course in which silence is no longer to be maintained.

Another Victim of the Brickyard Riot.

CHICAGO, May 16. John Ridenour, one of the striking brick laborers who was dangerously wounded at the bloody riot at the City Park last Monday, died at 4 o'clock this morning. Ridenour was removed to the Sisters' hospital on Capitol Hill after the shooting and found to be badly wounded in the back and arms. Since then he has been hovering between life and death, but early last evening his chances were thought to be slightly improved. Ridenour was 32 years of age. His death makes the second fatality among the men who suffered in Monday's tragical affair.

He will be buried with Kelly on Sunday and the two men will be mourned by an immense concourse of the representatives of labor who will follow their late comrades to the grave.

An ante-mortem statement was made by Ridenour on Thursday evening in the presence of Dr. Martin, Charles Cuchart, Thomas Dixon and others to the effect that he saw F. N. Davis shoot Kelly. He could not tell who fired at himself.

The funeral of the two victims of the brickyard riot will take place to-morrow afternoon. Meetings have been held by all trades assemblies for several days, at which the actions of Davis and his men were condemned in the severest terms. The excitement among labor circles is at a very high pitch and it is believed fully 10,000 men will be in the funeral procession to-morrow. The city officials, in anticipation of serious trouble, have doubled the police force. The trial of Davis and his men, which was set for to-day, has been continued until Monday.

The Rio Grande Floods.

SANTA FE, N. M., May 16.—The sheriff of Valencia county reports over two thousand people homeless in his county on the east bank of the Rio Grande. Opposite Los Lunas, the county seat of the county, many houses and crops have been destroyed by the floods in the Rio Grande. However, the river is slowly falling.

Dr. Graves Indicted.

DENVER, May 16.—The grand jury this evening returned an indictment against Dr. Thomas Graves charging him with the murder of Mrs. Josephine Barnaby by administering poison. The doctor has not yet been arrested and it is understood no warrant will be issued until Monday at least. Several other indictments are expected in this case [illegible]

FOR SALE.

1. The magnificent business property, southwest corner Pike's Peak and Nevada avenues, in the exact heart of the city, being at the point where the original four wards come together. This property has a frontage of over 150 feet on Nevada avenue, and 100 feet on Pike's Peak avenue, and has 14 feet on the alley by the city clerk's office. Inside of two years this corner will be as good as the corner of Pike's Peak and Tejon streets for business purposes, if not better, for it fronts on two 110 feet avenues, and being more centrally located commands the situation, and I will sell it for one-third the price that will buy the other. Meanwhile the improvements on it pay the taxes and leave a handsome surplus.
2. The equally splendid residence property on North Tejon street, fronting 400 feet on the Rapid Transit line, running from Willamette avenue to Monument street, with a depth of 130 feet to a 20 feet alley, in a most desirable neighborhood. One half the frontage on Tejon street and the 130 ft. frontage on Willamette avenue is larded with ten year old maple and locust trees. I will sell this grand property, if taken at once, for $35,000. Compare this with the corner, one fourth, the size, in Shook's Run bottom, which the school board was so glad to get for $8800, and you will see it is very cheap.
3. I have a large block of desirable property, consisting of lots improved and unimproved, which, while a good deal of money is required to handle it, I will sell for just one-half its real worth at market prices. The improvements yield a very fair return over and above the taxes, and within two years the property should be sold at a profit of at least 100 per cent. for anyone who will invest in it now. This is really a big thing, and I will be glad to show it to anyone who means "business." None others need apply.
4. A choice business corner on Huerfano street, 75 by 190 feet. A first class location for a warehouse, a grain and feed store, or a large blacksmithing establishment, which will catch all the trade entering town from the west. Or it would be just the corner for a forwarding and commission house, a coal and lumber and wood yard, or a stone and marble yard; large enough to show and keep stock properly, and convenient for shipping via several lines of railroad. This is a great property for someone who has the means with which to buy it, and the business requiring such a location.

BIG LITTLE BARGAINS.

1. THE GREATEST BARGAIN IN THE CITY, without exception. A three room brick house on a corner lot, 50x167 feet; city water, barn, chicken houses, etc., in Loomis' addition ONLY $800. FIRST COME FIRST SERVED. The lot alone is worth almost the money.
2. Five lots corner Kiowa and Spruce streets, each 38 feet frontage on the rapid transit line, just four blocks from Antlers hotel. To quick buyers $400 to $500 each. Great bargains.
3. Two fine lots on Washington avenue, close to town, for $1475, or $740 for one lot. Terms half cash, balance two years at 8 per cent. A snap for someone.
4. A corner lot 50x190 feet, facing south, on Colorado avenue, in West Colorado Springs, for $800. Everyone knows this will soon be worth much more money.

PARRISH'S ADDITION.

1. A lot 50x150 feet, on Kiowa street east of Chestnut, for $750. Inside lots in inferior locations are selling for $1000.
2. Corner 100 by 135 feet on Platte avenue, $1200.
3. Corner 100 by 190 feet on Bijou street, $1400.
4. Corner 50 by 190 feet on Kiowa street, $850.
5. Corner 38 by 100 feet on Bijou street, $600.
6. Corner 100 by 190 feet on Pike's Peak avenue, $1800.
7. Inside lots on Pike's Peak and Platte avenues and on Kiowa and Bijou streets, from $700 to $1200, according to size and location.

Lots in West End Addition, Walnut Addition, Ordway's Addition, Bowell Addition, D. Russ Wood Addition, Loomis's Addition, North End Addition, Edward's Addition, La Vanture, Colorado City, Manitou, Cheyenne Heights, and in the great resort, Broadmoor.

COUNTRY ESTATES.

1. I am authorized to offer for sale, for a short time, the charming country residence and estate, so well and favorably known as Ridge Farm, viz.: 159 acres of enclosed land, only two miles north of town on the road. This place is subdivided into four fields, and seventy acres under cultivation. No irrigation is required, good crops of grain and potatoes being raised without it. The improvements consist of a handsome house of 9 rooms and bath room with hot and cold water, water being furnished from hydraulic ram set in the stream which abounds on the property. There is a good barn, 30x60, corn with 6 box stalls, carriage, feed and chicken houses, good room for ten tons of hay; meat house, dairy house; ice house containing ten tons of pure ice, cut from pond covering an acre of ground near the house; satisfactory water fourteen feet deep from the springs, ever flowing and pure. There is one spring 8 feet deep, of iron and sulphur water. Also a potato "dugout" holding 20,000 lb. The residence is insured for $3000. I can sell this valuable desirable place for less money than has been expended in the improvements upon it. Someone can make a fortune running it as a resort for invalids at all seasons. It can be kept full all the time. The owner wishes to practice his profession in the city, or he would not think of selling.
2. Blair Athol! Unsurpassed for grandeur and beauty of scenery; wonderful surroundings; remarkable freaks of nature in stone and earth; lovely trout; a second GLEN EYRIE. Anyone wishing a home surrounded by nature in its wildest, grandest, weirdest, most awe-inspiring, and at the same time its lovely forms, can here find it.

A DONATION.

I will give, free of cost, to any respectable association that will establish itself thereon, sufficient ground at "Fairmount Park," two miles from this city, for the purposes of a Sanitarium, Summer Resort, Hotel, or other institution of public character, which will attract people and public attention to the location; provided such institutions or establishments be of first class character, and be backed by sufficient means. CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED.

Few things can be more surprising than that in his old age Prince Bismarck should turn against the system of which for many years he was the [illegible] porter. But monarchy always finds its principal supports within the charmed and superior circle, and there is nothing more likely to change one's views in regard to the proper constitution of a state than to be suddenly transferred from among the governors to the governed. However we are heartily glad that from any cause Prince Bismarck has come to more sensible and unselfish views and if he is really the author of the pamphlet recently issued in Germany he has given the emperor some very sensible advice. It is in effect that the young emperor should not talk too much for "the divinity that doth hedge a king" suffers somewhat when people comment too frequently on such epithetes as the recent "I alone am master" speech. We cannot help feeling that there is more or less of nature and sarcasm in this apparently friendly piece of advice but the emperor might do much worse than to ponder and profit by it.

Mr Thomas C. Parrish has just published facsimile reproductions of two of his pen and pen and ink drawings. One is the "Cathedral Doorway" Garden of the Gods and the other "Tower of Babel," Garden of the Gods. These will be followed next month by three others, giving picturesque views in Monument Park and the Garden of the Gods. The size of the reproduction is twelve by eighteen inches, which is the most effective size for framing. They are printed on Japanese vellum and mounted on heavy plate paper. There will only be three hundred of each of the prints printed. The price for each one is $1.50 or for the set of five, $6.00. The process by which these are reproduced retains the full effect of the pen and ink drawing and when framed it will take an expert to distinguish them from the originals. These sketches are very beautiful in themselves and have been very truthfully and sympathetically interpreted by the artist. There have been no reproductions of the beauty spots here which seem to us as effective as these. Our readers will find them on exhibition at Miss Moore's, the Comprehensive bookstore, The Antlers and Wellington's, also at Mr. Parrish's studio, 20 North Weber street. One of these pictures will be a beautiful souvenir to send east.

THE RIGHT OF SELF DEFENSE.

Such incidents as that which in Denver recently resulted in the death of two men and the wounding of several others are always greatly to be deplored. It is not only in the loss of precious human lives and the misery which falls upon their innocent families that the causes for regret and reflection arise. The beauty of human life, the respect for human affection and grief are indeed late fruits of civilization, but there are some primitive and wider interests here involved.

It may be taken as a principle that the necessity for forceful self-defense in a civilized state is evidence of the weakness of its social organization. In a well organized government there should be no occasion for the individual to be called on to perform those duties for which the government is especially organized. Whatever may be the evil of an extra-legal act it is less than the evil which produced it for the admitted necessity for extra legal protection, either on the part of a community as in New Orleans or on the part of individuals is an acknowledgement of the failure of the established government. That country is only comparatively civilized where the machinery of the law occasionally fails and requires a supplement.

On the other hand, citizens and communities while they must be accorded the right of self-defense, even to the extremity of taking the lives of men must in every such instance prove the insufficiency of the law and exercise this right only under plea of direst necessity. No man has the right to presume that the law is powerless or prejudiced.

In the Denver case it does not appear that Mr Davis and his employes were negligent in invoking the protection of the law. They had asked for a guard to be sent to their premises. It would perhaps have been wiser if the representatives of legal authority had accompanied them on their way thither, but they may have had no anticipation of any trouble at that time.

The plea of sudden and imminent peril must be a powerful justification in all cases of self defense, and upon this point the guilt or excuse of Mr. Davis and his men must turn. The striking workmen claim that they were unarmed, that they meant no violence and that they only wished to talk with Mr. Davis' men. It is also claimed that one of the men who were killed was not a striker at all. These may be facts, but they were not self-evident facts. The strikers had previously used violence in this contest with Mr. Davis to such a degree as would have accomplished their object had it not be[illegible] by the marshals' [illegible].

They had [illegible] a wagon and bruised its occupants; they had carried pistols and discharged them, if not at men, at [illegible] towards them, with the purpose of [illegible] Mr. Davis and his men [illegible] about their business for a legal purpose and in a legal manner and they had the right of way.

The labor unions contain a large majority of the well trained workmen of this country. The nation, as a whole, is indebted for having them well paid, well educated and prosperous. In their efforts to secure this they would naturally expect and might receive the sympathy and support of the community were it not for such actions as those of this Denver Brickmakers' union. The recourse to violence in these cases is un American and cannot be too strongly condemned. It is a growing evil which cannot be checked too soon.

The courts must accord the same justice and the same protection to all. They must recognize the right of every workman to sell his labor for himself that he can to earn as much wages as he can, to rise to as high a position in the world as by nature, by education and by culture he is qualified to fill, to combine with others of his trade for mutual protection and mutual advancement. But these rights are to all alike. The union man cannot be outlawed. The American citizen has the right to work for whom he will and for what pay he will. He has the right to demand from the state protection at his work, and protection on his way to and from his work and if the law fails or in sudden and imminent peril, he has in extreme necessity the right to defend himself, though the consequences be as in Denver.

We neither affirm nor deny the guilt of Mr Davis and his men though there is strong presumption that they supposed their acts were in necessary self defense, since that is the opinion of a majority of the coroner's jury, and the strikers put themselves clearly in the wrong when they attempted violence to keep any one from working and from going and returning in peace. Let the courts decide upon the facts, the principles are for public discussion.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Louis J Jennings and His Work as a Writer of Stories.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, May 11.—When Mr Louis J. Jennings was living in New York he was about the last person who would have been considered as likely to produce works of fiction. Not that he did not have the ability, but that he was a very busy man intensely absorbed in his duties as a journalist, and at one time particularly engaged in a most stirring and important public service. Yet we now have the second novel from his pen. It is entitled "The Philadelphian," and although it has been published in this country only a few days, the sale has been considerable. This is partly due, perhaps, to Mr. Jennings' prominence as a member of the English parliament and partly to the fact that anything he may write is sure to be read by a considerable number of those who knew him when he was the editor of the New York Times.

Yet this personal interest does not account entirely for Mr. Jennings' popularity as a writer of fiction. His first story, called "The Millionaire," was an exceptional sale. In it Mr. Jennings revealed a capacity to tell an interesting story. He adopted the favorite method of novelists who know something about America and more about England, of depicting the experiences of a wealthy American while in exciting life on the other side of the ocean. The story was so good that the recollection of it easily induced those who read it to read "The Philadelphian."

This latter story might just as well have been called "The Virginian," or "The Dynamiter," or "The Welsh Squire," for the part which the Philadelphian takes in the story is really subordinate to that which is ascribed to other characters. The story is a word dashes the experiences of a Virginian and his daughter at the castle of a lonely Welsh squire, who has married for his second wife an American lady, and who is mysteriously interested. The plot hinges upon this mystery of murder, and the discovery of the assassin is told with no little dramatic power, and is quite as surprising a thoroughfare as are some of Wilkie Collins'.

As a delineator of characters Mr Jennings is even less successful in "The Philadelphian" than in "The Millionaire." His men and women are too automatic; their creation is too manifest. Once in a while they say and do something which suggests real flesh and blood creations. But, on the whole, Mr. Jennings' handling of them is too manifest, they are too apparent agents in the telling of the story. But while he evidently fails in suggesting living characters, Mr. Jennings succeeds in telling a story which excites and keeps the interest until the end. In this work his journalistic training is very evident, and the story of "The Philadelphian" is just such as might have been expected from a competent reporter who is describing a remarkable crime.

When Mr Jennings was making himself and the New York Times famous by the extraordinary combat which he carried on successfully with ring rule in New York city, whose boss was William M. Tweed, it was supposed that he had the most promising career ahead of him of any of the younger men in journalism. He was the editor of The Times, chosen to succeed Henry J. Raymond, but he did not control the property, excepting in his editorial capacity. After the victory of The Times over the Tweed ring Mr Jennings' star was in the ascendant, and he had friends who were willing to place money at his disposal with which to buy a controlling interest in that newspaper. For a time it seemed as though Mr Jennings would succeed, but the control passed elsewhere, and he retired from the management of the paper at the very time when he seemed to be about to secure a permanent foothold and to become recognized as among the chiefs of journalism in New York.

Mr Jennings returned to England, his native land, and it was thought that he would in London perhaps duplicate his brilliant career as a journalist in New York. This judgment, however, was not confirmed. While Mr Jennings did continue his journalistic work, and was esteemed an able journalist, yet his successes have been more in a political direction than in newspaper work. He was elected to parliament, where he has served for several years, and where he managed to lift himself above the average level which characterizes that body of legislators.

It was a surprise when Mr Jennings showed some desire to give up political activity and to devote himself to literature. The quality of his intellect is aggressive, he is a fighting politician, just as he was a fighting journalist. Activity, the desire to be of influence in the shaping of events, and great courage in maintaining his position, are the qualities which especially distinguish Mr Jennings but they are not the gifts which are looked for in a successful writer of stories. Therefore, when his first novel "The Millionaire" was published it was thought that it would reflect Mr Jennings' aggressive, combative nature, and might be a discussion of the business problems of the day under the guise of fiction. But it was nothing of the sort, it was simply a story, and told for the sake of the story. Mr Jennings has the capacity to become a great story teller although he certainly will be unable to win great fame as a creator and delineator of character.

Just as "The Philadelphian" was published Mr Jennings was celebrating the marriage of his daughter, one of a large family of beautiful girls. He married that charming actress and beautiful woman, so long a favorite in New York, Miss Madeline Henriques, and a most devoted wife she has been to him.

THE FLEETING SHOW.

Gossip and News Gathered Here and There Upon the Streets.

The committee from this city that went to Glenwood Springs last week on Governor Routt's special had a better opportunity of getting acquainted with Postmaster General Wanamaker than with any other member of the presidential party. They found the ruler of all the postoffices and the owner of the biggest store on earth a jolly companion as ready to make a hitting speech as to tell a story. He is full of jokes and stories and if there is a humorous side to anything he sees it. For instance, Chief Justice Helm was introduced as one who began life as a drummer boy, and Mr Wanamaker quickly interjected, "Oh! I thought you were going to say as a commercial drummer. Just in my line. He had a number of amusing incidents to relate of their journey. At one place the train came up where there was a crowd of anything but moral cordial up and seated upon the cars a number of wretched looking Greeks. They carried a banner made in the most primitive way on which was printed "Welcome to the Grandpa of Baby McGee." This was the whole extent of the play. Mr Wanamaker is very much interested in his work as postmaster general, and declares that he has done harder service since he took office than he has done for ten years before. He gives figures showing how the service has been extended in the years since Mr Harrison became president that seem marvelous. Mr Wanamaker says the appropriations of congress are entirely too small, but that it is his object to use the appropriations as far as possible in extending the service and opening up new offices. He believes it better to give the settlers in a new locality an assurance that their letters can reach out into the world and that they can hear from their friends occasionally than to expend the appropriations in perfecting the work in the large offices. He says that the department fully appreciates the growth of the west but has no way in which to meet it. Mr Wanamaker feels that his recent trip will be of great benefit to him in his work and says that every cabinet officer should visit the whole country at least once a year. Perhaps I am about to relate a state secret but it was given in a miscellaneous crowd without reserve. Mr. Wanamaker says that he believes the president is in favor of unlimited coinage of the American product of silver but is not in favor of trying to coin the silver of the world. An effort was made to get the president to say this in some of his Colorado speeches, but it failed.

It is something of a mystery how newspaper writers and correspondents can sometimes make the mistakes they do. With the plain facts before them, it would sometimes seem impossible for them to do otherwise than relate them correctly. That they do make them is sometimes painfully evident, as I well know by experience. The truth is that the newspaper man is human, and, like everybody else, gets tired of his work. What may appear of the greatest interest to others, may be very tiresome to him, and yet he must try to enter into the spirit of it and naturally does his work in a perfunctory manner. Perhaps a amusing incident of the way in which a correspondent will jump at a piece of information without investigating was shown in one of the reports sent out to the press associations by a correspondent, traveling with the presidential party. He had been told that the demonstration represented a gathering from three cities, and as he rode along the glaring banners caught his eye "Canton Colfax" and "Big Injun Lodge, A. O. U. W." Surely he argued these must be the towns referred to and in some of the eastern papers that have reached us we learn that delegations were present from Colfax and Badito.

While in the northern part of the state I came upon one of the old frontiersmen of that locality who was known through all the country round about as "Wild Horse Jerry." He was a type of one of the old wild horse hunters, who have, because of the rapid settling of the country, and the disappearance of the bands of wild horses that once roamed the prairies, been obliged to abandon their former pursuits for those better suited to a well settled country. He was a strongly built man with a reddish beard, and lived upon his ranch, where he had a small cabin, and a large number of horses, a part of which he had captured and broken himself. For many years this man's sole occupation was the hunting of the wild horse bands that wandered at will over the plains enticing other horses of the range to join their number. His success in this field of industry has been remarkable and had it not been for his great devotion for the cup that intoxicates he would at the present time be a thriving man with a comfortable fortune. During the years in which he has been engaged in his profession he has captured nearly one thousand horses. This he has done only by the hardest work, following the bands day and night over the monotonous prairie stopping now and then to change horses and to procure food and remounting again to follow the band until at last the horses became accustomed to seeing him in their wake and wearied with the continued chase they allowed themselves to be corralled. Notwithstanding the fact that his life has been one filled with experience sufficient to undermine the strongest constitution he is still strong and healthy and if the old bands of wild horses should once more return he would no doubt be ready to mount and follow them day and night as of old.

Where Gold Comes From.

The gold taken from the river bars was mostly in the form of scales resembling cucumber seeds, and of varying size. It was most plentiful on the bed rock and in a few inches of soil above it, though sometimes three or four feet of earth would pay to wash. Where the bed rock was soft shale or slate on edge the miner picked away an inch or so and washed it as frequently the scales were found to be driven quite thickly into the crevices. When the ground was very rich the rocker was cleaned of gold every hour or so.—E. J. Waite in Century.

MR. ARTZ PUNISHED.

Judge Campbell Fines Him One Thousand Dollars and Delivers a Scathing Rebuke.

Yesterday afternoon, in the district court, Judge Campbell, after a brief review of the testimony, decided the contempt case against Attorney H. H. Artz, to be guilty of the charge. The defendant when asked whether he had anything to say why the judgment of the court should not be pronounced against him made a few remarks, after which the Court sentenced him to pay a fine of $1000 and costs, and to stand committed to the county jail until fine and costs paid.

The proceedings against Messrs. William Harper, T. A. McMorris and Ira G. Hasson in connection with the disbarment proceedings, to prepare disbarment papers, and the district attorney was directed to prefer charges of perjury against Mr. Artz for what he had testified to in this case.

THE SENTENCE WAS AS FOLLOWS.

"It may be true, Mr. Artz, that the concession, dropped the curtains you made in the first part of April, in the evidence shows that you were willing for a time, then, at a time when the case was offered, it cannot be any thing but yielding to temptation of a lawyer yielding to temptation of a client, tempting, or by any influence whether by use of money or other means or expect for the purpose to abuse the Court, or to induce such witnesses to commit perjury to make statements which you thought to know are not in accordance with the facts in the case. I can conceive of a person not a lawyer, related to or not charged with a serious crime, willing to spirit away witnesses but I can not imagine a thing of that sort, does it, does it knowing the full consequences of his act, and he knows the law in this offense of that sort.

"I can conceive of no offense which is more injurious to the administration of justice in courts than the spiriting away of witnesses or the corruption of witnesses inducing them to commit perjury, and for a lawyer to be guilty of anything of this sort seems to me makes the offense infinitely greater than if committed by a layman. The offense of which the court has adjudged you guilty is a flagrant one, not against the honored profession to which I belong, but it is an offense that is infinitely greater, against the community.

"If lawyers refuse to obey the law and willfully violate them, it certainly, the least, sets a very bad example for others and if courts, through mistaken ideas of leniency and other motives of sympathy, and because of any personal feeling, fail to inflict the punishment that is commensurate with the offense that would be an excuse for others to do their duties, and to refrain in a public manner those who are charged with crime, simply because they have some sympathy for them, or are influenced by motives of this kind, I say, and I feel that it is my duty in this case, that while I have been in court, there has been no lawyer admitted at the bar, who has been more severely in the court room and who has spoken with more consideration of himself than Mr. Artz. Whatever may have been his reputation outside, in regard to this I have nothing here to say, I feel it my duty to say, upon this occasion, that no lawyer have been more courteous, no one have been fairer in the trial of cases or more moderate in the treatment of the witnesses, and for this reason, among others, it is more or less embarrassing to pronounce the sentence which I think my duty to do in this case. But my consideration must not, for a moment, and as I have said before, I consider it an offense almost beyond my power of speech fully to characterize. I can conceive of nothing that is more abhorrent to the sense of justice which should actuate, not every individual, but certainly more than this attempt to drive and to keep from the jurisdiction of the court witnesses who are subpoenaed to be witnesses.

"It is my duty to say to the members of the bar assembled here, especially the younger members of the bar—not that they need any occasion for it, I am willing to say—but I think they should be warned and never yield to the temptation however great it may be, to induce witnesses that may be opposed to them in a matter to commit perjury or to go beyond the jurisdiction of the court, I don't think of you will ever do so, but I think, also, that no temptation ought to be great as would, for a moment, cause to be guilty of offences of this character. I conceive that one who would be guilty of the attempt to spirit away witnesses or a step further, it may not be a step but certainly would go to the extent of inducing witnesses to commit perjury. Lawyers should be very careful, in case they attempt to talk to witnesses on the outside. They should be exceedingly careful in dealing with them or having anything to say to them outside of the court room, because lawyers driven to the wall in a case or think they are driven to the wall, if they are such as to attempt to have anything to do with witnesses on the other side might yield to the influence of the moment and for their clients, might be induced to hold out inducements to the witnesses which would be entirely improper. At the least that can be said is that proceedings in this case are not creditable to those who are connected with the attempt to spirit away witnesses for the defense. I hope I shall never again be called on to pass sentence for an offense of this character.

THE SENTENCE.

"The judgment of the court is that you are in contempt of court, as charged in the information, and the judgment of the court is that you pay a fine of $1000 and costs and be committed to the county jail until fine and costs are paid.

DISTRICT COURT.

The opening of court yesterday morning James Daily changed his plea of not guilty to one of guilty. He, with Edward Wilson and Frank Wilson was charged with the burglary of Dayton Bros. in March last. Daily's changing his plea, he has stated that he did not believe the other three men could be convicted and entered a nolle as to them.

The People vs. John Foster. Burglary. Set for trial May 18 at 2 p. m. Foster will conduct the defense.

The case was taken until 10:45, at which time Mr. Lewis, as attorney for Watson, stated that the defendant desired to withdraw the plea of not guilty to the second count of the indictment and plead guilty thereto. The second count charges assault with intent to commit rape, the penalty for which is imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than fourteen. Mr. Lewis said that he desired it understood that he insisted strongly as ever on his innocence, but, because of the absence of witnesses, he desired to make the change. After pleading guilty, Watson was remanded for sentence.

The case was called in the case of the People vs. William Taylor and Henry Jones, two negroes charged with burglarizing a residence in Colorado City. The testimony was finished soon after noon and the result was a verdict of guilty of grand larceny as to Hopkins, and acquitted as to Taylor.

1251 E. L. Woods vs. J. M. Bossey. Default of defendant entered.

After the decision in the Artz case, Mr. Garrison nolled the case against Mrs. Mary Briggs, both by and the court being of the opinion that she had been used as a tool by Mr. Artz.

1457 Fredericka Rumpf vs. Louis Rumpf. Default of defendant set aside upon payment of costs, and answer to be filed within five days.

Court will meet at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

World's Fair Agents Abroad.

WASHINGTON, May 16.—Director General Davis, of the World's Columbian commission, has asked the secretary of the treasury to provide the payment of the expenses of certain persons to go abroad in the interest of the exposition, out of the $10,000 appropriated by Congress to be used in connection with the admission of foreign exhibits. The department decides that not exceeding three persons, to be selected by the director general, may be designated by the secretary of the treasury to act under the provision of the law and to be paid from the appropriation referred to. Such persons will cooperate with such representatives of the treasury department as may be sent by the secretary directly to furnish information in foreign countries as to the methods of admitting foreign exhibits.

BELLEVUE SANITARIUM.

Reports of the Officers Made at the Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Bellevue Sanitarium society was held at the residence of Dr. Solly, on Tuesday, May 12. The reports for the past year are as follows:

PRESIDENT'S REPORT.

The Bellevue sanitarium has now completed its first year of active work having received its first patient on May 8, 1890. A reference to the reports of the secretary and of the treasurer will show what work has been done and what is the present financial status.

The institution has received into its kindly care people, some of whom have been called to the great beyond, some cured, and all have found rest and refreshment. Unfortunately, it and its friends have been the recipients of the most ignorant and unjustifiable abuse, which, it was hoped would prove the opinion that an independent hospital is still hoped for in Colorado Springs. A liberal endowment, or a fund of $4000 a year would make it possible to offer only the best of care and nursing, and unless it should be forthcoming, the sanitarium must close, at least temporarily.

Such an establishment cannot be economically managed with so few inmates, but it is believed by a majority of the managers that if the necessary alterations could be merely completed, the increase of board would not be far enough in excess of the increase of expenditure as to make the institute self-supporting. Upon this independent basis it is thought the house would be constantly filled, as many who are unwilling to accept that for which they cannot pay full cost would thus be relieved of all sense of obligation. The desired addition would cost, with accessories, such as heating, furnishing, etc., about $6,000, $4,000 of which are already offered.

There are many invalids who cannot find just such help and home life in any other house, and it is earnestly hoped that this refuge need not be closed to them while so many interested and zealous workers are ready to give time and strength to its management. My earnest wish is that another year may see the Bellevue prosperous and thriving and doing a useful and helpful work. LIDA M. TOUZALIN, President.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The work of the Bellevue Sanitarium society the past year has been carried out with success so far as the limited means of the society would allow. The institution has afforded relief during suffering, and kindly and sympathetic care during the closing hour of life to several of its inmates, whilst others have left the home enabled to take up work in the world with renewed health and courage. It is much to be regretted that support adequate to the needs, and in proportion to the usefulness of the Bellevue Sanitarium, has not been forthcoming. Those who are conversant with the working of such institutions will readily divine the cause in the lack of an endowment fund, as the building does not contain sufficient sleeping accomodations to be self supporting on a business basis.

The number of patients received during the year 31; inmates at date 8.

M. A. GARSTIN, Secretary B. S. S.

ANNUAL REPORT OF TREASURER.

RIO GRANDE.

Train to Denver 8.30 a. m., 3.00 p. m. and 5.20 p. m. connecting with all Eastern trains.

The best line east is the Great Rock Island. Through trains, quick time, sure connections, absolute comfort, clean cars (free from dust), superb dining cars, fourth seats, Pullman palace sleeping cars, free reclining chair cars, lowest rates, polite employees, courteous treatment. In short everything combined to make a strictly first class route, combined in the Great Rock Island. W. W. WOOD,

Ticket and Pass. Agent, 12 Pike's Peak ave.

CHEAP RIDE TO CALIFORNIA.

If it costs you to buy a ticket to south or California via Santa Fe Route (quickest and shortest line), and in California you remain but a month or a week, it's a cheap trip, isn't it? The worst part in this case is getting to Pueblo.

CAR ATTENTION!

It is a long time yet before you will take your knapsack packed for the great encampment to be held at Detroit Mich. but some of you are even now inquiring as to the best route.

If you will ask any ticket agent for a copy of the Great Wabash folder containing a map of the Great Wabash route and will examine that map, you will see that this line offers inducements unequalled. For instance you will see that the Wabash can take you from either Kansas City or Council Bluffs by way of St. Louis and Chicago or Toledo or via the direct air line straight to Detroit without change of cars.

General Agent, 555 17th St. Denver, Colo.

IN ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

The Rock Island Coaches to acknowledge the liberal patronage of the traveling public of Colorado Springs, and to assure them that the unusually large and important business with the same points that has been transacted with the officials and employes of this popular railway. Our new Colorado Coaches run directly to Chicago via St. Joseph, Kansas City without change, and are equipped with the best equipment that money will buy. The dining cars in which all meals are served are simply perfect models of excellence. For tickets, maps, lowest rates, etc., apply to W. W. WOOD, Ticket and Pass. Agent, 12 Pike's Peak avenue. Telephone 97.

TO TEXAS FOR A SONG

For a ticket to Ft. Worth or Galveston, via Santa Fe Route at regular rates, and you will be amply repaid by views of scenery in fertile Arkansas or lovely Indian Territory. A land of happy homes all the way. Through Pullman service from Rocky mountains to deep-water. Santa Fe Route is most comfortable line to Texas.

There is no comparison between these elegant Parlor cars now running on the Santa Fe and the ordinary chair cars. Try them on the train leaving Colorado Springs at 7:30 a. m. and for Pueblo and Kansas City at 11:15 a. m.

SPECIAL VESTIBULED CAR FOR COLORADO SPRINGS.

One of Pullman's latest and finest sleeping cars is set out at Colorado Springs by the Santa Fe route daily, for the accommodation of Colorado Springs patrons. This car is taken on by the Chicago train leaving at 7:30 p. m. Reservations may be secured at city office in Opera House block. The public are invited to inspect these cars at the Santa Fe depot. They are positively the finest cars on the road.

The Santa Fe commencing May 17th running a special excursion train on each Sunday between Denver and Woodland Park leaving Denver at 8.00 a. m., arriving at Colorado Springs at 10.30 a. m. Returning will leave Colorado Springs at 6.00 p. m., and arrive at Denver at 8.30 p. m.

MORE EQUIPMENT.

The Great Rock Island has put on another Pullman Palace sleeping car, running between Colorado Springs and Kansas City. This sleeper lays over at Colorado Springs. For tickets, maps, and full information regarding your eastbound trip call at 12 Pike's Peak avenue. Telephone 97.

The Denver and Rio Grande are now running between Denver and Salt Lake and Ogden with through Pullman sleeper to Oakland without change of cars. 1-13-tf

TO DENVER.

Rock Island train leaves Colorado Springs 9.30 a. m., arrive Denver 12 noon. Leave Colorado Springs 4.30 p. m., arrive Denver 7 p. m. Returning leave Denver at 7:45 a. m., arrive Colorado Springs 6 p. m., returning leave Denver 8.45 a. m., arrive Colorado Springs 11.15 a. m.

ALWAYS ON TIME.

EASY AS A CRADLE.

Each vestibule sleeper on the Santa Fe Route "Cannonball" train between Denver and Chicago is as easy as a cradle. Chair cars, library cars and day coaches are equipped with conveniences that satisfy the most fastidious traveler. No prettier, easier or more comfortable train has ever cut a hole in the night.

Our citizens who have not tried those new parlor cars on the afternoon Santa Fe train should do so. The cars are veritable parlors and the chairs as comfortable as the finest parlor chair, not to be compared with the ordinary chair cars; something entirely new.

SPECIAL EXCURSION TRAINS

On Sundays and Wednesdays the Colorado Midland will run special excursion trains to Woodland Park and Florissant leaving two round trips as follows: First train leaves here at 8.15 a. m., going as far as Woodland Park, returning arrives here at 11.05 a. m. Next train leaves at 11.35 a. m., and goes to Florissant, returning arrives here at 5.00 p. m. These trains will run as above until the regular suburban train service goes into effect.

The Only Laxative Now Used by Fashionable Women

To perpetuate a beautiful complexion is Wisdom's famous Robertine, which is as harmless as the morning dew, as subtle in its action as the magic wand and as invisible when the bloom and delicacy it gives to the cheek—as the air we breathe. Read the testimonials from famous artists, celebrated chemists and eminent physicians. Sold by all druggists in Colorado Springs.

THAT TERRIBLE COUGH

In the morning, harrassed or difficult breathing, raising of phlegm, tightness in the chest, quick hard pulse, chills, or in the evening or sweats at night, all or any of these things are the first stages of consumption. Dr. Acker's English Cough Remedy will cure these fearful symptoms, and is sold under a positive guarantee by F. E. ROBINSON.

THE GAZETTE.

DUNDAY MAY 17, 1891

Mr. May Frost of Lake George, who has been spending a week in the city, left for home to-day.

Grand Army hall is being wired for electric light and will be ready for occupancy by the 1st of June.

Remember the county assessor desires that you get in your tax schedule immediately. A delay may cost money.

Messrs. Elias & Logan are displaying a very fine line of gentlemen's tailored pantaloons. They report trade in their line improving.

Beginning to-morrow, to continue all the week, N. O. Johnson will offer $20,000 worth of dry goods, wraps and jackets at half their value.

Mr. W. Hampton de Fontaine, of New York city, who is a representative of the North American Review, arrived in this city yesterday.

The bids for the construction of the De La Vergne store on South Tejon street will be opened at Pease & Hartman's office Tuesday.

Little Bessie Clark, aged 8 years, daughter of Mr. George Clark, had the misfortune to have her arm broken yesterday, while at play.

The First Presbyterian church will give a reception next Monday evening to introduce the Rev. Mr. Jacobus, who has been called to fill that pulpit.

The Church of Christ, Scientists, meets at Durkee hall this morning at 11 o'clock. Bible class at 10 o'clock. Inquiry meeting Thursday at 3 p. m. All are invited.

M. Artzeim has closed his auction rooms in this city and taken his stock of oriental carpets and rugs to Denver, where he will open an extensive business at an early date.

Mrs. A. B. Leingle, the milliner on North Tejon street, has her store stocked with all the latest designs and attractions in her line, and reports the spring trade flourishing.

Mr. C. J. Hart, a ticket agent of Hartford, Conn., arrived at the Alamo hotel yesterday and will spend the summer in this city, together with his family, who accompany him.

Miss Hattie Slocum is another of the enterprising woman druggists who are making a success in that line. Miss Slocum is now in this city as the agent for an Omaha coffee company.

Mr. H. H. Tammen, the proprietor of Denver's famous variety store, stopped in this city for a few hours yesterday afternoon. He is now in Manitou and will return to Denver this afternoon.

The clerks of the city will meet to-morrow evening in the City hall for the purpose of reorganizing the clerks' union. All business men in sympathy with this movement are requested to be present.

The Good Templars will celebrate their 48th anniversary at their hall, on Nevada avenue, next Thursday evening, with a musical and literary entertainment. The programme will be published later.

"Mr. Ragan's entertainments are justly popular. His voice and manner are pleasing, and his discourse, interspersed with historical incidents, with humor and apt quotations, was both entertaining and instructive."—Boston Transcript.

Permanent arrangements having been made with Miss Fannie Aiken Tucker for her services as soprano in the First Presbyterian church, her many friends will still have opportunity to hear her in connection with the choir of that church.

There will be an important meeting of Colorado Springs Council No. 7, Order of Chosen Friends, Monday evening. All members are earnestly requested to be present, as the by-laws are to be adopted and other important matters considered.

The Boston Advertiser, in speaking of Mr. Ragan's illustrated lectures, says: "His views were unusually fine and called forth the warmest expressions of approval from the audience, which filled every seat in the spacious hall, many being obliged to stand."

The Young Men's Christian association will give their reception to the public in their new quarters, in the Carpenter block, on next Thursday evening from 8 to 11. The board of directors will be on hand to welcome all who choose to attend and to show them the new rooms. Refreshments will also be an attraction.

Says the Rev. Theo. L. Cuyler, D. D., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Charmed, delighted and instructed by Mr. Ragan's illustrated lectures. I went to Europe without the price of a steamer ticket or penalty of an sickness. His lectures are very attractive and admirable, and the views are superb." Rome will be Mr. Ragan's subject at the opera house to-morrow evening.

Mr. W. H. Leland, who for the past two years has been the steward at the Antlers hotel, has resigned and last night left for Chicago where he becomes the manager of the Hotel Vendome. Mr. Leland is one of the most popular men ever connected with a hotel in this city and will no doubt have a great success in his new work. Colorado Springs people will find the Vendome a good place to stay when in Chicago.

A meeting of the Manitou Board of Trade was held in that place last night. Delegates to the Trans-Mississippi congress, which convenes in Denver next Tuesday, were appointed and resolutions were adopted commending the action of the Denver Industrial and Commercial commission, asking for lower rates between Colorado points and the Missouri river. The delegates appointed by the president of the board were Messrs. D. L. Sterling, M. A. Leddy, C. N. Barker, C. H. Frowine, and John Simington. The town council has appointed H. H. Grafton to be the delegate of the town. The Hon. E. S. Nichols is to represent Pueblo county.

The Weather.

A cold rain day, very unusual at this time of the year, discouraged the attendance at the races yesterday very considerably. In spite of the cold a number of the fair and gentlemen remained until the close. There were three very pleasant races, which were crowded in in good style. It is hoped the weather to-morrow will be more propitious, and that the people will be able to enjoy at least one day of the sport thoroughly. The races for to-morrow are:

GENERAL SHERMAN.

By General Viscount Wolseley G.C.B.

Commanding the Forces in Ireland

(Written for the Gazette)

[illegible] In January 1861 General Sherman resigned his position in the army and accepted the presidency of a military school in Louisiana. He had [illegible] Louisiana. He was inaugurated as president of the school at Alexandria. His loyalty to the Union never was questioned, and he was considered to be a high-minded gentleman. He [illegible] the secession of the southern states, and [illegible] Washington. He was [illegible] Secretary of War, Mr Cameron, that he was willing to accept any position, however [illegible] Sherman was [illegible] Washington

CAPTAIN JONES OF THE ROSE.

BY W. CLARK RUSSELL.

Seven men sat in a gloomy wooden [illegible] the ceiling swung a sort of coffee pot, from the spout of which spiritless a smoking and stinking flame, whose disgusting fumes were felt in every where tasted in the atmosphere of the darksome wooden cave. The seven men were seated, not on mahogany chairs or velvet sofas, but on rude boxes, whose lids were scored by the cutting up of cake tobacco. There were one or two pillars or stanchions in this gloomy wooden cave, from which dangled several oilskin coats and oilskin leggings, and under the ceiling hung a bundle of [illegible] called hammocks, with here and there a ragged blanket peeping over the edge, or an old shoe showing through the meshes. In the midst of the ceiling was a square hole called a hatch, down which this day there floated very little daylight, owing partly to the hatch being small and partly to the sky being overcast with clouds.

Had these seven men seated in this interior been cleanly shaven, and had they been apparelled in well washed colored shirts, sleeved waistcoats, comfortable trousers, and caps with naval peaks, they would have passed as a harmless, respectable body of seafaring men persons who would say "mum" to a lady when addressed by her, and answer intelligently and respectfully when asked about the weather. But as they now sat they looked a sinky and grim set of fellows as one could imagine, strangely and fearfully attired, grimy of face and hairy, booted with half Wellingtons and belted in Wapping fashion, and timid people would have thought that they carried murderous air because each man wore a sheath upon his hip, in which lay a very sharp knife.

The wooden cave in which these men sat rose and fell as though it were the extreme end of a long board violently seesawed, and this motion, combined with the smell of the fumes of the slush fed lamp and a vapor rising out of a small tub of boiled pork, not to mention other odors such as might be produced by well worn, newly housed sea boots, bedding which had had several voyages round the world, sooty clay pipes, old casks of stale salt water and many mysteries of malodorous commodities stowed below in the hold and fore-peak, must instantly have upset the stomach of any landsman who out of curiosity should have put his head into the little hatch to see what was inside of it.

This cave was indeed a ship's forecastle, but the seven men who sat in it were mariners who had for many years been tossed by the various oceans of the world, and could not possibly have been [illegible] even though they should [illegible] offered a handsome reward to do so. One of them was a large, strong [illegible] with a shaggy head of hair and a [illegible] like rope yarn. He looked as though he had taken a header and come up again to blow covered with seaweed. The strong man suddenly, and with a sulky fury of gesture, whipped the knife out of the sheath that was strapped to his hip, and plunging it into a lump of pork lifted the horrid block into the air and cried out:

"Here it is again!"

As he pronounced these words the little square of hatch was obscured by the interposition of a man's body.

"The smell of that three pork," said the voice belonging to the body in the hatch, "is something to sit upon, something strong enough to lean agin. Why, a man might turn to and chop them fumes into first-class bunk board. Talk o' strength!"

"Odes below, cook!" hawled one of the seven men.

"No! I've got to see to the capt'n's dinner. But I'm of ye if there's to be trouble. When I signed it was for victuals and a dry bottom and a ship's company. Pump, pump and nothen to eat! Nat'en to eat and pump, pump! Here's logic as don't tally with this covey's reckoning for one." And the man, violently smiting himself upon the breast, disappeared.

The powerful sailor who had held the pork aloft while the cook discoursed, shook it off the blade into the tub again, and spat.

"It's about time," said he, "that all hands was served."

"All hands is agreed," said one of the sailors, "excepting that blooming Dutchman, Peter. But if he don't come into it it'll be a bad job for one of us if, on some dark night, him and me happens to be aloft together."

"That there Peter," said a sailor, "was a-hinting to me that he'd ha' shipped for a pound a month. D'ye know he'd eat a shipmate's shirt if by so doing he thought he would save a shilling by saving his allowance."

"This is sweet meat for Peter," said one of the seven, pointing to the pork, "and a pound a month is good money to Peter, and if Peter and the likes of him could get their way, then if ye wanted to see what sort of a man an English sailor looked like ye'd have to ask the master of the fust workhus as hove in sight to show ye him."

"What a blazing fool a fellow makes of himself when he goes to sea!" exclaimed a man with red hair and a broken nose. "I might ha' been a market gard'ner had I stayed ashore. Think of that! What did I run away for? For the likes of this for a parlor," said he, waving his hand round the forecastle, "and for the likes of you," pointing to the hammocks, "for a bed, and the likes of that mick," he added, pointing to the pork, "as a meal. But no, you lines allowed. Ho, no! Tell 'em that pickled dog ain't pork and that wermin ain't ship's bread and you're taken afore the magistrate and committed and locked up and left to rot, whilst the blooming Dutchmen are getting all the jobs, because pickled dog to them is pork and wermin a relish." He struck his fist heavily upon the chest on which he sat and fastened his eyes upon his huge knuckles whilst he twisted them about, as though he were [illegible] a couple of coal.

"[illegible] keeping all on a-hunting," said a quiet looking seaman, addressing the others over his folded arms "what's to be the border of the day?"

"A bust up," answered the strong man who bore the nickname of Black Sam. "Here we are, sixteen days out, and a bust starboard, and not enough [illegible] by six able seamen to work the ship. [illegible] keeping sober, and requiring to be [illegible] four hands, must fit to make a sculture of a ship's bread old and wormy, and the rest of us men's stores shop sweepings. Now this being so, I'm agoing to knock off work for one."

"And me for another—" "And me for another," went in a growl from mouth to mouth.

"There's the mate and there's the carpenter," continued Black Sam. "If the capt'n can work the ship with them two, well and good. But Peter he shan't have. Rather than that cuss of a Dutchman should be agin us and on the capt'n's side, I'd—" He projected his arm and wound with his powerful hairy hand to strangle something in the air.

At this point the square of hatchway was again darkened, and the salt, husky voice of the carpenter called down: "Below there! Hain't the starboard watch got their dinner yet? Tumble up! Tumble up! The wind's drawed ahead, and the yards want trimming."

"Tumble up!" exclaimed Black Sam. "Don't you be holding your nose too long over the hatch, or it'll be you we'll be tumbling down. Can't ye smell it? Oh, it's nothen but ye men's dinner. There's plenty left if ye've a mind for a bite."

"Who's that a jawing?" exclaimed Mr. Chips, who combined the duty of second mate with that of ship's carpenter. "Tumble up, I tell you. The wind's drawed ahead."

"Catch it and smell it for yourself,"

"LIE NUMBER TWO," SAID THE CAPTAIN.

shouted the seaman, plunging his hand into the mess kid and hurling a lump of pork through the hatch. The sailors heard the hurried steps of Mr. Chips as he went aft.

"He'll be telling the old man," said Black Sam; "let's go on deck and have it out lads. I'll do the talking part, with your good leave. We don't want no language. Civility's a trump card in these here traverses. We all knows what we mean to get, and I'll say it for ye."

He led the way; his shipmates followed; they gained the forecastle and stood in a group gazing at the after part of the ship.

The vessel was the Rose, from Liverpool to an East African port. She was an old fashioned composite ship, but her lines were those of a yacht, and there were few vessels then afloat which could look at her on a towline. Her yards were immensely square, and she carried swinging booms and main skysail mast, and her burden was between six and seven hundred tons. Such a ship as this demanded twenty of a crew at the least, not to mention master, mates and "sillers." Instead of twenty the Rose had sailed with ten men in the forecastle and a cook in the galley, and the others were a carpenter, who acted as second mate, an Only Mate, and the captain. Of the slender crew, two had been swept overboard in a gale of wind. They were foreigners, and the English jacks did not lament their shipmates' end, but on the contrary grinned fiendishly when it was discovered that the foreigners were gone, and they hideously wished that all Dutchmen who signed articles for the red ensign of England would go and fall overboard as these two foreigners had, and as promptly, too, so that nobody concerned might be kept waiting.

During the gale in which the two Dutchmen had perished, the ship had been so strained as to oblige the hands to serve the pumps every four hours. Undermanned, leaky, the provision rotten! There must be a limit to patience and endurance, even though the sufferer be a sailor. The seven seamen lumped together on the forecastle of the Rose stood staring aft. The cook, a pale man, lounged in his galley door, half in and half out, and his face wore an expression of sour expectation. The carpenter, as I may call him, was talking to the captain, and the Only Mate was slowly rising through the companion hatch as the body of seamen stood staring.

The captain, whose name was Jones, was a tall, lean, gaunt man, his face of the color of sulphur, his appearance decidedly Yankee, though he happened to belong to Limehouse. He wore square toed boots, a cloak that might have been taken from the shoulders of a stage bandit and a sugar loafed hat. The hair on his face consisted of a beard that fell from under his chin like a goat's, and his eyes were black, brilliant and restless.

The Only Mate, whose name was Johnson, was about half the captain's height. The ocean had done its work with him, had withered up his face, dried the marrow out of his bones, put a turn in either leg, so that his walk was like a pantomime clown's. Instead of being an Only Mate he should have been and the eighth part of a mate. You would have thought that eight at least of such men as Mr Johnson should go to the making of an Only Mate for the Rose had you set your glasses from his dried and kinked figure to the lively [illegible] particularly to the giant Black Sam, who, with the rest, continued to gaze aft.

The carpenter, or second mate, was a brown faced man of about 40, but brine had taken the place of blood in his veins, and he looked tot, with his white locks and rounded back and long, hanging arms whose fingers were curled in the manner of fish hooks. At the wheel stood the Scandinavian seamen, Peter, the like of whom you may see any day blowing in a German band in the streets of London, veal colored, freckled, yellow haired, a figure loosely put together, and as meaningless an expression of countenance as a dab's.

The captain was puffing at a long cigar that drooped between his lips. Presently he pulled his cigar from his mouth, and shouted: "We don't want all hands. The starboard watch can trim sail, starboard watch!" and replacing his cigar he fell to swiftly striding the quarter deck to and fro.

The seven sailors marched aft and came to a stand a little abaft the main mast. Black Sam advanced himself by a stop, and exclaimed:

"Capt'n Jones, we men don't mean to do no more work until our wrongs are righted."

The captain, speaking with a cigar in his mouth, halted opposite the men and said: "What are your wrongs? Are you too well fed? Are you growing too fat for the want of work? Say the word and I'll right their wrongs for ye fast enough."

"You've got a son under that there long boat, Capt'n Jones," said Black Sam. "Would ye give her the wittles as men have to live on and work hard on? Not. And why? Because the life and health of a man is of more consequence to the like of such men as you and the owners of this vessel than the life and health of a sailor."

Captain Jones clinched his fist and glared. But what is the use of one man clenching his fist and glaring at seven? Brave, hairy, resolute British seamen, and the captain might well know that he was but one man to the whole ship's company, for the Only Mate stood at the rail looking over the side as though he were a passenger, willing to listen, but rather anxious not to be involved, while the carpenter had stopped aft, and was dividing his attention between the companies and the quarter deck. The captain looked at each of him. He then puffed a few moments at his cigar, while an expression entered his face that would have persuaded strangers observers than the sailors he confronted that he intended to keep his temper.

"What have you to complain of?"

Several sailors spoke at once. Black Sam elevated his immense hairy fist.

"We complain of this," said he, "first, the ship ain't seaworthy."

"Lie number one," said the captain.

"She ain't seaworthy," continued Black Sam, with a menacing note of storm in his deepening voice. "You're as good a sailor as we men I suppose, and ye must know that a ship that needs to be pumped out every four hours ain't sea worthy."

"Next?" said the captain.

"All the wittles is rotten to the heart. Is this food for a man?" and Black Sam, putting his hand in his bosom, pulled out a biscuit and extended it to the captain. But the captain looked elsewhere, and Black Sam, with his face full of blood, dashed the biscuit on to the deck at the captain's feet, on which one of the sailors cried out, "See how they run!"

"Lie number two," said the captain. "Next?"

"Your ship's stores are rotten to the heart," said Black Sam. "The vessel's taking in water faster than she should and [illegible] The crew [illegible] seven less than the complement of such a vessel ought to be, and that ye know also. And here we are to tell ye this; that we're willing to go on pumping the vessel out for the next three days for our lives' sake, but not for yours; but that we don't do another stroke of work unless you shifts your helium and heads for the nearest port, where ye can ship more hands and wittles fit for men to eat. But if at the end of three days nothen's done, then we shall give up pumping, take the boats and leave you and Mr. Chips and the mate to keep the ship afloat by yourselves, if ye can. That's your mind, mates?"

"That's our mind!" was echoed in a hurricane chorus.

The captain looked up aloft at his canvas, then around at the seas, then at his Only Mate and Mr Chips, then at the crew, and at Peter at the wheel. His sulphur colored face was dark with temper. Nevertheless he spoke deliberately:

"This ship's going to make her passage. The leaks' nothing, the stores are first class, and there are more of ye than are wanted to do the work of the vessel."

He called to Mr. Johnson, the Only Mate, who approached him with a glance at the men that was certainly not remarkable for spirit.

"Mr. Johnson," said the captain, "you've heard what passed?"

"I have, sir," answered the Only Mate.

"These fellows will go forward," continued the captain; "they will swing in their hammocks and they will smoke their pipes; but no more stores are to be served out to them—no, not so much as a fragment of that excellent bread which lies wasted on the decks here until they consent to turn to. Then, I don't doubt, it will be all plain sailing again. Go forward now?" he cried, in a voice the sudden ring of which was like the report of a pistol. "Mr. Johnson, I'll take the wheel, while you, Mr. Chips and Peter, trim sail."

"Peter!" roared Black Sam, "we men have knocked off work till we're righted. If you lend the capt'n a hand, and side with him agin us—"

And again he advanced his enormous arm and caused his fist to scathe.

"Mr. Cheeps," said Peter, "take this wheel; I am unwell," and letting go the spokes the Dutchman marched forward and joined his shipmates, who roared out a defiant hurza as the whole eight of them, with the cook in their wake, made their way to the forecastle and disappeared.

Sailors have no friends and Captain Jones knew it. There are societies in Great Britain for the prevention of the ill usage of most things living, from women to dogs, from children to singing birds, but there is no society for the prevention of cruelty to sailors. Captain Jones knew that he had the power to starve his men into compliance. Never the less he passed a very uneasy night. When the morning broke the mate, Only Mate and Mr Chips were ready dead of fatigue, for and had [illegible] the hours of darkness, and the ship was a big one, and there were but two [illegible] the third being at the wheel, to let go and clew up, and haul down and [illegible] sung as best two men may.

When the morning came Captain Jones looked as if he had just come out of hospital; Mr. Chips, who stood at the wheel, might really have passed for a man of 70, and the Only Mate, as he was lighting the gales [illegible] had been toward overboard during the greater part of the night.

"Those blackguards in the forecastle will be wanting their breakfast," said the captain, "and you'll have them lay aft presently and [illegible] to turn to."

The men, however, did not show themselves. They perfectly understood that the ship could not be navigated as things went, and that the captain must come round to their views before the day had passed, and, indeed, long before the day passed, should a change of weather happen presently, and they grinned hush after man as they furtively peeped through the scuttle and saw old Chips at the wheel looking 70 years old, and Captain Jones as though he was just come out of hospital, and the Only Mate as though he had been towed overboard, and they preserved their grin, man after man, as they looked aloft and saw the unfurled royals and topgallant sails fluttering, and the stay sails flapping loose, and the yards very ill braced inboard.

"We've got yesterday's mock of pork," said Black Sam, "and the fresh locker ain't empty. If the old man were the devil himself we'd weather him out. But the ship mustn't be allowed to sink this side of Hilary days," and forthwith the sailors greatly rose, through the hatch and in silence walked to the pumps, which they paced until they sucked, and then returned to the forecastle. But there was no novelty in this proceeding, for they had kept their faith with the captain, and at early four o'clock through out the night a gang had turned out to pump the ship.

While Captain Jones sat sitting on the skylight, was drinking some coffee which the Only Mate had boiled, the carpenter, Mr Chips, munching a biscuit, at his side, and the Only Mate munching another biscuit at the wheel, a sail hove in view. The breeze was light and the sea smooth. Captain Jones hoisted the English ensign upon deck, and at about 9 o'clock in the morning the two opposite were nearly abreast of each other, the Rose with her topsail to the mast, the yards having been swung by Captain Jones and Mr. Chips taking the brace to the quarter deck captain. The stranger was a large, light bark, with painted ports. She, too, had backed her topsail.

"There is no use in hailing," said Captain Jones, addressing the Only Mate; "lower that quarter boat, Mr. Johnson, and go aboard with Mr. Chips. Tell the captain of the bark that my men have refused duty, and ask him if he will oblige us with the loan of a couple of hands to carry the bark to—," and he named a convenient port.

Forthwith a boat was lowered, and in a few minutes Mr. Chips and the Only Mate were pulling away as for their lives for the big, tight bark with painted ports. The captain, grasping the wheel, stood watching. Now and, again a hairy head showed in the forecastle hatch, and the noise of a hoarse laugh floated aft to the ears of Captain Jones. The foot [illegible] was thrown, and the Only Mate made the boat fast to it. Both men then clambered over the side of the vessel and disappeared.

The captain gazed eagerly, and while he stood looking a hoarse voice roared the following weather worn lines through the forecastle scuttle:

"Ye sailors of England, you'll be all right
If ye consider well what you're about and what you mean to do
You go to war with Yankees; I'll swear you'll rue the day
For you fought the sons of Liberty in North America."

The time passed. Captain Jones stood at the wheel with his eyes fixed upon the bark. Suddenly he ran to the companionway, picked a telescope out of its brackets, and, kneeling at the rail, directed the glass at the bark. He remained motionless with his eye at the telescope for some minutes, then stood up and sent a glance aloft, and look that swept the wide platform of his own decks, and his hollow, gaunt countenance wore an expression of perplexity, dismay and wrath, all combining a look that made him appear more than ever as though just out of hospital.

"By this, and by that, and by Cotheri," he roared, using words which, as they cannot be described, must be left to the imagination, "who'd ha' thought of two such this and that and something else suggesting whelps?" and even as he thus used language which cannot be written, the bark swung her yards round to fill upon the sails, and letting go Captain Jones' boat, which dropped quietly astern, sidled along her course, flying pilot and pointing at something west of north.

Captain Jones stood looking as though in a rift of his pipe, and many and [illegible] were the words which leapt from his lips. Again he looked along his deserted decks. There was nothing to be seen in the shape of human nature but a single head showing in the forecastle, and this head appeared to be graphically describing what its eyes beheld to the hidden world beneath, else how should Captain Jones account for the continued roars of laughter which saluted his ears? He stood alone upon his deck; either the Only Mate and the carpenter had been killed, or they had deserted him, and Captain Jones was perfectly right in his doubts for a moment that they had done the latter.

He rushed forward.

"Men," he bawled, "up with yer! You shall have your way. I'm a lonely man. Don't stop to consider. Ye shall have your way, but you must be quick."

Upon this, up through the hatch, with the agility of a seaman, sprang Black Sam. He was followed by the good man Peter, and in a jiffy all hands were on deck.

"See that bark?" roared the captain.

"The mate and Mr Chips have deserted me for her. They've stolen my boat. No! I'm not going to stop to pick her up. She'll be £15 against Mr Johnson and six months stop of it for robbery. I'm going to follow that bark; I am going to get those two men out of her. If the bark don't surrender 'em I'm going to run her down. Turn to now, my lads, and you shall have your way."

"Well, we see you're in a hurry, capt'n," said Black Sam, "and as ye know what our wrongs is, and as ye mean to right 'em in the manner I took the liberty of pointing out yesterday, we'll turn to, have your orders, and you'll find us willing."

The captain forthwith gave his orders. His commands would not be understood by the landsmen. Enough, if I say that in a very short time the Rose fully clothed in canvas was standing with her head direct for the bark, an able seaman at the wheel, the captain pacing the quarter deck, the cook preparing breakfast for the men aloft, and forthwith the sailors greatly rose, through the hatch and in silence walked to the pumps, which they paced until they sucked, and then returned to the forecastle. But there was no novelty in this proceeding, for they had kept their faith with the captain, and at early four o'clock throughout the night a gang had turned out to pump the ship.

THE DINGEE MILLION.

Ingersoll Lockwood's Startling Contribution to Our "Possible Cases" Series—A Hair-Raising Episode in the Long Island Crematory.

(Copyright, 1891, by Press Publishing Co.)

Old New Yorkers may remember Dingee's famous gambling house in lower Greene street. It was in 1872 that it was the most fashionable gambling house in the metropolis. Dingee, having been the first to introduce roulette [illegible] than the new world. It was in 1872 or a little later that he had [illegible] obliged his son Cyrill to sell the business. He retired to his country seat at Bricksburg, quite a palatial residence for those days, where he died shortly after, leaving a young widow [illegible] no child, a daughter, Daisy. Spite of the fact that she was perhaps the most talked about [illegible] throughout the country as the gambler's daughter, [illegible] respectable [illegible] would have [illegible] administer an estate [illegible] bills with Daisy thrown in for better or worse.

But Daisy Dingee [illegible] she wanted, and [illegible] more nor less than [illegible] aristocratic family in the country, to wit, the Delurys, whose fairy white mansion at the other end of the town was as tumble down and slightly looking as Daisy was sweet, fresh and well kept. Miss Dingee, therefore, proceeded [illegible] and deliberately and deliberately a colorless sort of an individual, who for want of sufficient intellect to make an honest living passed his time going to seed with the thousand or so acres of land belonging to him and his maiden sisters, Mrs. Prudence and Martha, three women who walked as stiff as the rolled [illegible] never were known to discuss any subject other than the Delury family.

When [illegible] was made known to them they [illegible] faint, but were too stiff to fall over and were obliged to content themselves with gasping out:

"What, Daisy Dingee marry our brother, the head of the Delury family?"

But it was the first idea that had ever entered [illegible] head, and he clung to it with a parent's affection for his firstborn. In a few months Mr. and Mrs. Monmouth Delury set out for Paris with that proverbial speed with which Americans betake themselves to the French capital when occasion offers. They [illegible] of a warmer place than Bricksburg. Delury improved rapidly and Daisy fell quite in love with him, made her will in his favor, contracted the prevailing fever and died.

When [illegible] the widower sent for his three sisters to join him. They had but one objection to going—that was to part company with the dear old homestead, but they overcame it the day after receiving Monmouth's letter, which happened to be a Friday, and took the Saturday's steamer.

To confess the truth, the Delurys had been so long past that their spare, aristocratic figures were rather the result of necessity than inclination. Six months of Paris life under the benign protection of Dingee's wealth made different women of them. It was wonderful what a metamorphosis Parisian dressmakers and restaurateurs effected in their figures. They became round and plump. They [illegible] talking about Bricksburg, signed themselves the Misses Delury, of New York, enrolled themselves as patrons of art, gave elegant dinners, and in a very short time set up pretensions to being the leaders of the American colony.

But remorseless fate was at their heels. Fitzgo unearthed the secret of old Dingee's million and the Delurys suddenly found themselves the sensation of Paris, the butt of ridicule in the comic papers. Monmouth had been in poor health for several months and this killed him.

Dingee's million was now in the eye of the law divided up among his three sisters, but fate willed it otherwise for the following year Hetty, the eldest, died of Roman fever and six months later Prudence fell a victim to rat poison in a small hotel at Grasse, a city of delightful odors in the south of France, whither she had gone in a search of balmy air for her sister Martha, who had suddenly developed symptoms of consumption.

Left thus alone in the world with old Dingee's million and an incurable ailment Martha's only ambition was to reach Bricksburg and die in the old white Delury mansion. It seemed to her that its great, spacious rooms would enable her to breathe more easily and to fight death off for possibly another year.

But it was not to be. She got as far as Paris when old Dingee's million again changed hands, going this time by will to Martha's only relatives, twin brothers, John and William Winkletip, produce dealers in Washington street, New York.

The will was a peculiar one as was to be expected. "I give, devise and bequeath all the property popularly known as the Dingee Million" to my cousins John and William Winkletip, produce dealers of New York, as joint tenants for their lives and the life of each of them, with remainder over to the eldest son of the survivor, his heirs and assigns forever, provided that said remainder man shall not fall heir at the time of his father's decease and shall then [illegible] the ministry of the Methodist [illegible] devote his life and the income of this estate to the [illegible] of legislative enactment [illegible] for the [illegible] and [illegible]

In order [illegible] the Dingee million [illegible] among certain religious [illegible] institutions.

When the [illegible] from Paris informing them of the extraordinary [illegible] Winkletip lie there, the [illegible] part of the old tenement which served as their place of business [illegible] fossil [illegible] sorting [illegible] As the [illegible] one a fitting post after [illegible] for [illegible] million, for [illegible] had [illegible] have yet [illegible]

"[illegible] Cyrus, who [illegible] worth [illegible] was a [illegible] worthless [illegible] not [illegible] went [illegible] table [illegible] from sound.

"He will die [illegible] before his father," everyone remarked, "and then the gambler's money will go where it ought to go."

There had been a fire next door to the Winkletips about the time the good news had arrived from Paris; a huge warehouse had burned down leaving a brick wall towering sixty feet above the adjacent ten-cent in which the brothers did business. They had [illegible] the authorities, but the inspectors had pronounced the wall perfectly safe. So the two brothers continued to come and go in their best Sunday clothes, however, for they were only engaged in settling up their old business.

Suddenly, without the slightest warning, the huge wall fell with a terrific crash upon the wooden tenement, crushing it like an egg shell. When the two brothers were taken out from the ruins John was pronounced dead and a coroner's permit was given to remove him to a neighboring undertaker's establishment. William lived six hours, sensible to the last and grateful to an all-wise Providence that his worthless nephew would now be excluded from any control over the Dingee million.

Jabez Winkletip was a grass widower, his wife, an Englishwoman, having abandoned him and returned to England, and for many years he had made his home with his only other child, a widowed daughter, Mrs. Timmins, who was openly opposed to many of her father's peculiar notions, as she termed them, one of which was his strong advocacy of cremation, he being one of the original stockholders and at the time of his death a director of the Long Island Cremation society.

Consequently Mrs. Timmins gave orders that immediately after the coroner's inquest her father's body should be removed to her residence in Harlem, but as the officers of the cremation society held the solemnly executed direction and authorization of their late [illegible] and [illegible] his remains, they were advised by the counsel of their corporation that such an instrument would justify them in taking possession of the remains at the very earliest moment possible and removing them to the crematory.

Warned by the undertakers of Mrs. Timmins' threatened interference, they resolved not to risk even the delay necessary to procure a burial casket; in fact it would be a useless expense, anyway; and consequently John Winkletip began his last ride on earth lying in the cool depths of the undertaker's ice-box.

As Mrs. Timmins cab turned into Washington street she met a hearse, but not until she had reached the undertaker's establishment was her suspicion transformed into certainty by being told that her father's body was already on its way to the crematory.

Mrs. Timmins was a long-headed woman. She knew the uncertainties of cab transportation through the crowded streets of New York, and dismissing her cab at the Chambers street station of the Third avenue elevated, she was soon speeding on her way to the Long Island city ferry.

This she reached just as a boat was leaving the slip. Misfortune number one. When she finally reached the Long Island side, she threw herself into the carriage nearest at hand, crying out:

"To the crematory! Five dollars extra if you get me there in time!"

It was not many minutes before Mrs. Timmins became aware of the fact that the horse was next to worthless and could scarcely be lashed into a respectable trot. Mrs. Timmins was nearly frantic. Every minute her head was thrust out of the window to urge the hackman to greater speed. There was but one consoling thought, the hearse itself might get blocked or might have missed a boat.

As again and again her head was thrust out of the carriage window, her hair became dishevelled, for she had removed her hat, and the superstitious Hibernian on the box was on the point of abandoning his post at sight of the wild and crazed look presented by Mrs. Timmins. Was she not some one's ghost [illegible] this wild and [illegible]

But the promise of an extra five dollars kept the man on the box.

Suddenly a cry of joy escaped Mrs. Timmins' lips. The hearse was just ahead of them; but its driver had the better horses and half suspecting that something was wrong, he whipped up vigorously and disappeared in a cloud of dust. Mrs. Timmins' horse was now as wet as if he had been dipped into the river, and she expected every minute to see him give out, but, strange to say, he had warmed up to his work and now in response to the driver's urging broke into a run.

Again Mrs. Timmins caught a glimpse of the black coach of death in the dust cloud ahead of her. The race became every instant more exciting. It was a strange sight and instinctively the farmers in their returning vegetable wagons drew aside to let them pass. Once more the hearse disappeared in the dust clouds. This was the last Mrs. Timmins saw of it until she drew up in front of the crematorium. There it stood with its black doors thrown wide open. She had come too late! Her father's body had already been thrust into the fiery furnace.

The antagonism of Winkletip's family to his views concerning the cremation of the dead was an open secret with every attache of the society, and the men in charge were determined that the society should come out the winner. They were on the lookout for the body. Everything to the minutest detail was in readiness. The furnace had been just [illegible] greatest destroying power, and [illegible] as it that taste overcame [illegible] from the foam flecked and panting horses of the undertaker drew up in front of the entrance to the crematory.

The ice chest was snatched from the hearse, borne hurriedly into the furnace-room, set upon the iron platform beneath [illegible] the very center of the white flames whose waving, curling, twisting tongues seemed reaching out to their fullest length, impatient for their prey, and the iron doors slammed shut with a loud resounding clangor.

At this instant a woman, hatless and breathless, with dishevelled hair, burst into the furnace-room.

"Hold! Hold!" she shrieked, and then her hands flew to her face and, staggering backward and striking heavily against the wall, she sank limp and lifeless in a [illegible] the furnace room.

But the two [illegible] neither eyes nor [illegible] As the doors closed [illegible] posts of observation [illegible] peepholes, and [illegible] the effect of the flames upon the ice chest.

By the vapor [illegible] from the [illegible] pushed back from the [illegible] there for an instant as if paralyzed by some urgent [illegible]

Then happened something [illegible] caused the men to rub their eyes as if their limbs were paralyzed by [illegible] and which painted their faces white [illegible] deep a pallor as [illegible] have laid upon them.

From the furnace came the [illegible] dull, muffled [illegible] Help!"

Making a [illegible] fore open for [illegible] innerself on [illegible] air [illegible] "Help!" ran [illegible] ered for an instant [illegible] the chest, and [illegible] it, and began to lift it up [illegible] The doors were battered out, and John Winkletip [illegible]

But the Dingee million seemed to draw back, instinctively, from the [illegible] of the worthless scamp Winkletip.

With loud cries of joy the various beneficiaries under Martha Delury's will now discovered that Cyrus Winkletip was born on the eleventh day of August, and that as his father had departed this life on the tenth day of August, the son was not of full age when his father died. But the law put an end to this short lived joy by taking known one of its curious bits of logic which so often startle the layman.

It was this: The law takes no note of parts of a day, and therefore, as Cyrus Winkletip was of age on the first minute of his twenty-first birthday he was also of age on the last minute of the day before—consequently on the first minute of the day before he was twenty-one!

This gave the Dingee million to Cy Winkletip!

Under constant and stringent surveillance and tutelage, Cy Winkletip was, after several years, of as close application as was deemed safe in view of his weak mental condition, admitted to the ministry in accordance with the provisions of Miss Delury's will.

At last the wicked Dingee million seemed safely launched upon its task of undoing the wrong it had done, but Cy Winkletip's mind ran completely down in five years and he died a wretched, blathering idiot.

Mrs. Timmins [illegible] warm off the Dingee million with a gesture of horror, but yielding to the solicitation of her friends, she consented to take title in order that she might create a trust with it for some good and noble purpose. To this end by a last will and testament—she created and endowed the American Society for the Suppression of Gambling and Wager-Laying, and then died.

The trustees at once began to erect the buildings called for, but before the society had had an opportunity to suppress a single gaming establishment the lawyers, at the prayer of Mrs. John Winkletip, Mrs. Timmins' mother, fell tooth and nail upon the trust, which was declared too "vague, shadowy and indefinite to be executed," and the Dingee million, its roundness now sadly shrunken, made its way across the ocean to Mrs. John Winkletip, of Clapham Common, London.

She died last year, and, with her the wanderings of the Dingee million came to an end. She willed it to trustees for building and maintaining a hospital for stray dogs and homeless cats, and those learned in the law say that the trust will stand.

JAWS OF VARIOUS BEASTS.

How Nature Enables the Animal World to Live and Enjoy Existence.

"[illegible] dile's lower jaw is not socketed in the skull, as is the case with other animals, but the skull is socketed in the jaw, so that the animal can lift the upper part of its head as upon a hinge, and so capture whatever prey may be at hand without going to the trouble of getting upon its legs. This is a great saving of exertion to the siurian, which delights in wooing soft repose upon the voluptuous and brown mud bank. It was Herodotus, the father of history, who first commented in recorded writing upon this surprising circumstance respecting the crocodile." So Osteologist Lucas, of the Smithsonian Institution, was saying to a Star writer, and he added: "You can find another example of nature's adaptation of the jaw to use in the case of certain carnivores, like the otter, a big weasel that has acquired aquatic habits. The jaws of such beasts are so fixed in the sockets that dislocation is impossible. In some instances you cannot, even after the animal is dead, separate the jaw from the head. This arrangement is evidently designed to enable the beast to bite to the greatest advantage without danger that the chewing apparatus will come loose. The elephant's jaw, on the other hand, not being intended for biting but for grinding vegetable food, is an appendage almost separate from the rest of the skull. Although enormously heavy it has only a small articulation connecting it with the upper skull, and its whole weight is carried by the muscles, in which it may be said to be slung, so that it can grind back and forth. A snake's lower jaw is attached to a sort of outrigger extending back from its skull. Also the two halves of the jaw are connected by elastic ligaments so that it finds no difficulty in so stretching its mouth sideways and perpendicularly as to be able to seize low animals much bigger than itself. Some deep-sea fishes are similarly rigged. The human jaw is very loosely socketed in the skull, so that it is often dislocated by the mere act of yawning. Not being intended for biting purposes offensive or defensive, no attention seems to have been paid by nature to making it fast. While we are speaking on this subject I may as well show you this little stuffed fish, which has no more popular name than 'autunarius.' It angles for smaller fishes with this appendage on top of its head, which is designed to imitate a worm. The autun

When the judge [illegible] he found that a messenger [illegible] the house, mentioned the [illegible] forgetfulness, described where [illegible] was, and asked for it to take [illegible] Then the judge remembered what he had said in open court. Charles Ascilineau, the noted French [illegible] once told me that his father, who [illegible] aristocratic in speech and [illegible] suddenly came upon one of [illegible] gallery in his [illegible] joke [illegible] was unhooking the old gentleman's gold chronometer from its stand [illegible] mantelpiece. A FRENCH LIBRARY.

THE GREAT NATIONAL BOOK COLLECTION AT PARIS.

How a Public Library Grows—The Outlet of Free Publications—Rights to Newspapers—The Trade—Duties of Librarians

PARIS, May 10.—The organization of the national library is based on what is called the "depot legal," or obligation imposed on every French printer to place in the hands of the superior authorities two copies of each book print, map, piece of music, wall bill etc., issuing from his presses. These copies are brought together every week at the ministry of the interior and distributed into two series. One copy belongs by prescriptive right to the national library where it is sent, the other is handed over to some Paris or provincial library or to a ministry or some public establishment, school, college, faculty etc. So that everything printed in France should necessarily be found in the collections of the Rue de Richelieu.

This excellent system is perfect in its simplicity, and so easily worked was instituted by Francis I. We are told that it gave but poor results under former governments, as the authorities were not always over watchful in seeing that the rule was applied. Still, but very few works of the last three centuries are wanting at the library, and in these times, the relatively limited number of new books rendered it more easy to detect the absence of those which should have been sent in. Nowadays the case is different. There are many negligent printers they are never punished, in spite of the law which authorizes certain fines and penalties, and the quantity of incoming books increases with the ever increasing number of publications. Yet the service may be said to work satisfactorily, indeed too satisfactorily for certain classes of books, if account is taken of the slight interest they afford. The library, in fact, can neither refuse a work nor remove one from its shelves except with infinite precautions, hence an overwhelming mass of useless matter, but we shall revert to the subject when speaking of its real and fictitious treasures.

This legal deposit of two copies only concerns French works. Attempts have been made to obtain, free of cost, a certain quantity of foreign books, and to organize an international depot, which would have afforded foreign writers full and complete copyright of their works in France, on an equal footing with French authors. The system, however, works very poorly, especially since the adoption of new conventions in respect of literary property. Hence a second difficulty, that of purchase. Choice is then not to buy, but works of real interest, the choice, however, is one of great difficulty, and it often happens that foreign books contain useful matter as well as curiosities; nevertheless, this portion of the collection is extremely valuable and as complete as can be expected.

Books also reach the library by a third channel—that of gifts. A large number of private persons of all nations offer their works to the National library. Some are sent from Central Asia, some even from darkest Africa, printed by a native chief in the most unheard of tongues! Of all governments that and their official publications to the French library, the United States is the most generous. American politics, finance, and statistics can be as well studied in Paris as at Washington; nothing is wanting to us that way from the "State Papers" to the least "Meteorological Reports"—well bound in solid covers and often gilt-edged.

A fourth channel by which books reach the library is that of international exchange. In this case different contracting states send to one another a whole category of special works, such as those on law, letters, sciences and medicine; academical publications and the annals of learned bodies. These exchanges are affected with America through the Peabody Institute.

A fifth source is constituted by home exchange, either with private persons or municipal libraries. It is not a service properly speaking, for the reason already adduced.

A sixth source is somewhat original, it consists in the refuse of the postoffice. Few persons imagine the vast number of newspapers, reviews, pamphlets, even books which cannot reach their destination, as those to whom they are addressed are not to be found. These offsourings are yearly made over to the National library and it often happens that blanks and omissions are filled up by their means. A large portion of this postal refuse consists in English novels of the Tauchnitz edition.

Here a few figures may prove interesting. In 1810, the depot legal furnished 1,311 volumes in 1820 5,549; in 1830, 15,001, the two succeeding years offer figures lower by a third, doubtless attributable to the revolutionary troubles of the time; but they again rise and reach in 1840 to 22,774, in 1850 we find 31,075 volumes; in 1860, 20,631, from which date the figures remain much about the same until 1869; the year 1870 and 1871 scarcely yield together 37,000 volumes on account of the Franco-German war; then the annual number, after rising to nearly 30,000 in 1874, comes down again to 20,730 in 1876, it is still seen at 20,400 in 1880; goes up to 44,768 in 1882, reaches 63,680 in 1883, and closes at 58,702 in 1887, the last official date. There has certainly been improvement since then and five or six thousand musical scores have been added within the past few years.

From the same statistical tables published by M. Leopold Delisle it appears that five out of six French works are now printed in the provinces, whilst in 1810 the ratio was inversely proportionate. In other words, the provincial printing presses have gradually augmented their production at the expense of the capital. For instance in 1820 Paris printed 19,033 volumes, and the provinces, 2,963; in 1852, Paris printed 11,701 volumes, and the provinces, 11,106, which is near, for all from the half. In 1874, Paris gives 9910 volumes only, and the provinces 19,421, and finally, here are the exact figures for 1884: Paris, 6156, and the provinces, 50,000. In fact, little beyond the daily journals, certain special works, and printed matter urgently needed, now fall to the share of the Paris press. Tours, Lithogen, Lille, Evreux, Rouen, Poitiers, etc., are the provincial towns where most printing is done. Tours is the greatest centre for printing in the whole world.

We will now follow the fate of a volume from the hour it enters the French national library until it is ready for distribution in the reading room. If arrives on a Friday, the day whereon the depot legal "prefecture" is received from the ministry of the interior to the Rue de Richelieu. As soon as the book is registered on a special register, it passes on to the catalogue office, where a like formality awaits it, but in a less summary manner. It is given a place in one of the divisions to which its subject matter entitles it, it receives a number, an exact description of its appearance is copied on a card, the substance of these cards is printed and forms every month two small bundles, one for works published in French, and one for foreign works, finally after certain verifications, the book takes its place on a shelf where it may enjoy everlasting rest, or whence it may be taken down daily for even several times a day.

The reader who comes to work at the National library must obtain an entrance card if he wishes to gain admittance into the private reading room, another room in the Rue Colbert is open free to everyone and so to speak reserved to the poorer class of people or stray visitors who seek its shades in summer and its congenial atmosphere in winter. This distinction is somewhat arbitrary for it is certain that the intellectual level of the private reading room does not surpass if even it attains, the level of the room where the less fortunate are relegated. Matthew Arnold, while traveling in the United States, was astonished to find himself in a library in New York seated beside a boy with naked feet, who was absorbed in his book. In France the dignity of a reader in frock coat would be more than astonished he would be scandalized in the highest degree by such promiscuousness, because our manners and our institutions are at complete variance.

Once within a large hall of a Moorish style of architecture known as the "salle de travail," or what we should call private reading room, the visitor inscribes on a printed slip of paper the title of the work he requires and in about twenty minutes the book is brought round to him. The library has been frequently blamed on account of the slowness with which this part of the work is done as it sometimes happens when pressed by demands that double that time lapses before the book can be obtained, the fault, however, lies with the public powers who refuse the grants required to increase the number of assistants.

The day has long since gone by when the librarian lolled back in his easy chair, taking time leisurely. The number of readers has increased threefold within the last twenty years. From 25,000, which they numbered in 1868, the figure went up to 71,500 in 1884. Within the same period the number of works handed the readers increased from 60,713 to 274,211; and to this large increment should be added 50,131 readers and 90,782 works handed them in 1881 at the public reading room, this making a grand total of more than 130,000 readers and upwards of 300,000 volumes. The whole of this work is performed by fifty four functionaries, if we except the clerks and servants, while for a work less heavy or at any rate scarcely equivalent, the British museum counts 150 functionaries.

Many an amusing anecdote which shows the difference between past times and present has been told of the old and patriarchal library. At a date no earlier than 1840, the librarians formed among themselves a small academy of modest savants, somewhat addicted to grumbling, and who, says the legend, yielded reluctantly to the very natural desire evinced by the readers to consult a few books. Among them were to be found not only jealous book lovers who were loath to lend the works over which they kept vigilant guard, but mistrustful bibliomaniacs for whom the public was a foe whose enterprise should be at any price discouraged. It was necessary to have recourse to strategy and stratagem to obtain a loan of the most innocent book such for instance as a tome of Lacepede's classic work on "Animals," or a weekly review like the "Magasin Pittoresque." It is useless to add that any such selfish excess is now-a-days impossible, over and above the category of books condemned to a shelf in "hell," with the Aretino, De Sade and many more, the entire library is at the disposal of any reader who can produce his entrance card. The functionaries have often to use prodigies of patience and perseverance in order to satisfy certain inquisitive but ill informed persons, who can only give an approximate idea of the volume they require. Some, for instance, will ask for the "History of France" by Lamartine, a work that author never wrote or Louis Blanc's "History of Ten Years," which is frequently ascribed to Thiers or Henri Martin, some will seriously ask for the "works of Shakespeare" translated into French by Voltaire," etc. Once a volume of poems entitled "Les Nevroses" was asked for as a medical work and it was with great difficulty that the applicant was brought to a conviction of his mistake.

The staff of the French National library is mainly recruited among the students of the Ecole des Chartres (special school where the best type of the ancient archives, old French bibliography, the deciphering of manuscript and other abstruse sciences are necessary to those who life is going to be up to books and old historical and literary documents. As I have said, these functionaries are less numerous, and they are moreover less paid than at the British Museum. Their business chiefly consists in cataloguing the new books sent in and the old books whose inventories were but summarily drawn up in former years in fetching from their place on the shelves the volumes demanded by readers, this work is almost wholly done by helpers in receiving the demands and hearing the remarks or objections of readers in both reading rooms, in instituting special and sometimes difficult researches for books little known or insufficiently indexed etc. Of these various labors evidently the most important of all is the reduction of the catalogue, that Penelope's web which has been under way since the reign of Louis XIV and which is now nearly ended. This enormous catalogue published in large quarto volumes of a thousand pages each, with eighty full lines to the page, would include upwards of a hundred tomes and represents more than fifty thousand days of work!

A FASHION LETTER.

SOME HINTS FROM G. FELIX, WORTH'S RIVAL.

No Revival of the Crinoline Likely—The Lady Dress Improver—The Rage for Velvet—Gown Styles for Spring and Summer.

PARIS, May 3.—I am forever being asked if there is any likelihood of a return of the Reign of Terror known as the reign of crinoline. And my stereotyped answer, no, a hundred times, no. It is strange how people refer constantly to the abomination, as if in the natural order of things it must some day return to fashion. The dress improver which indeed is only a mitigated form of crinoline is in my opinion hardly less ugly and quite as much out of taste as regards entirely in the harmony and simplicity of line, beauty in the human form itself not in a base caricature of nature's handiwork. How is it possible for taste to manifest itself and beauty to exist with such a hideous excrescence beneath? Look at the women of to-day as dresses that would, but do not disguise the graceful outline of their figures. The worst type of such Parisian you will agree with me is infinitely less hideous and I am proud to think that I have done a great deal towards bringing it into vogue. Every inch of superabundant drapery is a mistake in my eyes, and all trimmings which have not as it were their "raison d'etre" ought to be tabooed. You will think it strange for me to say so, but I would rather see a woman clothed in the plainest gown run up by her maid, than clad in the complicated arrangements in fashion some years since.

Throughout the winter we have been making a great many velvet dresses with absolutely plain skirts, sheath shaped in front, and with some flowing pleats at the back and cut so as to train a few inches, though intended for wearing out of doors. Such skirts may be convenient, but they are not elegant, and they may just as well sweep the ground as touch it, in both case a ladylike distaste to defile the hem of the feminine garment will prompt the wearer to lift it out of harm's way. Many of our evening robes were made with panniers. Now the panier, when kept within bounds, is not merely effective in itself, but follows out and accentuates the natural form of the hips, and in doing so makes the waist appear slighter.

I do not advocate change for the sake of change, but it is generally understood that each season must bring with it some modification of fashion. The sheath skirt or fourreau and the panier have provided us with a text for a series of very becoming gowns, both simple and dressy. The severity of the fourreau is broken by the addition of a sort of overdress that falls in folds over the front of the skirt and in a narrow train behind, while it leaves the sides uncovered. This overdress has a low bodice supplemented by a high one with long sleeves of the same material as the sheath, and the sides of this bodice confined at the waist by a belt—a full that falls over the hips, playing the same part as the panier. We ring the changes "ad infinitum." Thus, in one instance the "fourreau" high bodice and sleeves will be of yellow, striped horizontally with a deep blue rib and the overdress of dark blue Bengaline. Or, the entire toilette may be composed of pearl grey crepon, the sheath skirt and sleeves ruled with lines of narrow lace braid. Again the foundation may be silk or brocade and the upper strata black lace.

In other models, the arrangement of the skirt is maintained, whereas the bodice suggests a Figaro, vest the cut lines of which are pencilled in metallic braid. While for dinner and evening dresses designed for home wear, which although low in the neck, have something of the tea gown about them the same effect is produced with delicate hued China crape, which forms a sort of tunic, draped becomingly from the shoulders and confined at the waist like a Greek robe, so as to fall in elegant folds back and front, leaving the sides plain and statuesque.

Crepons of all kinds are very popular this season, and the French lawns provide me with an inexhaustible variety of simple patterns and exquisite colors on the one hand pale grey, heliotrope, lilacs and dull pinks, on the other dark blues, bright yellows and reds of brilliant dyes. The supply of thin silks is equally varied. Those I find particularly suitable for an empire style of gown. Here is a delicate Indian silk of an azalia tone spotted with black, made up into a round full skirt bordered with bands of black lace insertion, a ruching of silk and full elbow bodice. A dress somewhat similar is produced in a new style of silk that has the shine of satin the softness of faille and the lightness of foulard. It imitates the hue of the poppy in its tender with small white stars. Mme. Le Brun may have sported such a frock. Now taffetas omitted from our fashion lists. Crisp white taffetas, checked with black satin, makes up charmingly in the form of a round skirt with bodice almost without seams, exhibiting the figure to its full perfection thanks to gathered frill falling below the waistband.

We are [illegible] the Louis XV coat still in favor which is but we prefer not to carry the bulge all the way round which has the effect of utterly [illegible] woman in two and contracts from her height. So the back pieces of the coat are made in one with the skirt, the bosque performing the same office as the panier. An elegant costume in old blue faille [illegible] with a floral pattern [illegible] ancient design is being [illegible] coloured with embroidery [illegible] shades of the same to [illegible] Mme. Carlot.

Black silk embroidered with jet is a favorite. Of all our most serious materials [illegible] are not all young in [illegible] pretty is made partly of [illegible] silk and partly of black satin brocade, the latter composing the pointed [illegible] train. This mantle, with its loose faille sleeves, mounted in a double box pleat standing up like a [illegible] behind, and its plastron of velvet sparkling with jet suits it to perfection.

Jet decorations I hold in high favor, and am extremely partial to them in the shape of light tracery upon such delicate tints as rose petal pink, palest turquoise, blue or golden maize for evening dress. A pink silk robe, the upper skirt cut into long tongues shaped pieces worked with jet is charming while the introduction of black velvet draperies about the decolletage is eminently fitted to set off a pair of white shoulders. The designer is bound to think of these things, and it is this constant desire to please the lady whom he dresses in the best possible light that lifts him above the common herd of dressmakers.

The fair reader will not be content if I do not add a few words about the coiffure. A smart mantle of the renaissance cut, a dress of shot green chrome silk richly worked with jet, fur trimmed with full hanging sleeves, Roman tabs and deep basques of the same black lace. Capes or mantles, as we call them, borrowing a name from the coachers of the last century, in the same glossy silk and entirely devoid of trimming are the only natty wraps for fresh and spring like for youthful shoulders. For the aged there are few more becoming wraps than a half long mantle in seal brown velvet lined plush, weighted by [illegible] set with opazes and fallings in heavy fol is from the Medici collar with which is fully nestling against the throat lies an amber hued boa of ostrich feathers. Less arrive but perhaps more elegant is another model. Just a long supple cloak of palest grey cashmere, or cream of which the wearer tosses carelessly over the left shoulder secured around the throat by a long pin plus feather boa. We make wraps, too, of transparent materials, for instance black net embroidered with gold supplementing [illegible] gown by a second under cloak of light silk.

As for mufflers, I am more than half inclined to leave it out altogether for it is next to impossible to give in written words an adequate idea of a hat without. The prettiest headgear is the least easy to describe because its prettiness resides in the very fact that its component parts are deftly blended together into a becoming whole. What I to be said of the hat that is but a rim of dainty mice face enclosing a coronet of lilacs of the one composed entirely of leaves and flowers and of the bonnet which reminds you of the creole kerchief set on a diadem of scarlet blossoms, of the chapeau with a frilled brim in lieu of strings, or of the apotheosis which is attached by gilded ribbons around the chignon, save that each in its way is charming. We are making fanciful collarettes and fichus to suite with our chapeaux, cunning amalgamations of lace and flowers, that recall the head covering whether it be toque or hat, and serve at the same time to complete a dress for out of doors. Here is a drapery of chantilly fastened by bouquets of lilac, there a high frill of lace bound by a cordon of buttercups or cowslips. One fichu of black tulle is studded with violets, another with crimson tipped daisies and each has not only a toque to match but also a sunshade, a dome of tulle stream and garlanded with the same delicate blossoms.

TO VISIT CHICAGO IN 93

Co-operative Clubs for the Purpose of Raising the Money Are Being Formed.

[Special Correspondence.]

CHICAGO, May 12.—One of the most significant as well as encouraging indications of the interest that is being manifested in the forthcoming World's fair is to be found in the number of co-operative clubs that have already been organized, or are in process of organization, in different parts of the country, having for their object the conveyance of large delegations from each particular locality to Chicago in 1893. For, after all the final success of the enterprise depends in a great measure upon the hearty patronage and support of the great masses of the people.

The national government, the various state legislatures and the people of Chicago have done nobly in the matter of providing the vast sums of money that must be expended before the doors are opened with the blare of trumpets, but after that the millions of dollars that will have to pour in to meet the running expenses, to say nothing about piling up a handsome surplus will necessarily come to a very large degree from the pockets of the producing classes, from afar as well as near.

During the Centennial year there were doubtless tens of thousands of people from the west and south who were more than anxious to visit the great show in Fairmount park, and were only deterred from doing so by lack of the one thing needful. This time, so far as population is concerned, the fair will be much more advantageously located but at the same time it will cost as much to come from Wyoming, Utah, Louisiana and other distant points to Chicago as it did to go from Chicago to Philadelphia in 1876, and there are very few wageworkers who without previous preparation and exercise of economy, can afford to apply the earnings of weeks or of months even to a World's fair junket. Hence the formation of the co-operative clubs may be accepted as illustrative of the oft repeated declaration that the interest of the masses has been aroused in the fair, and that they propose to lend it not only their moral but their material support. Several of these clubs have been brought into existence in the south, others up among the Rockies and on the Pacific slope, and still others in the east. In the majority of cases the members simply propose to contribute so much per week in order that they may have accumulated a little pile by the summer of 1892, without having particularly missed it.

In Nebraska, however, there has been organized an excursion and investment company with a capital of $[illegible]. The membership fee is [illegible] payable in installments of fifty cents per week for two years, and for this amount the concern agrees to transport the members from a central point in that state to Chicago and back on special trains to pay for their meals en route and to defray their expenses for a week in the Windy City at the best three dollar hotel, and furnish tickets of admission, guides and printed information. A half dollar a week is not greatly missed, and consequently it is little wonder that the artisans and graingers of that state with their wives, their sisters, their sons and their aunts are availing themselves of the opportunity to visit the city with a view to a good room for thousands of such clubs all over the country, just as they will be pleased to room and a hearty welcome for their members when they get there two years hence.

Too much circulation cannot be given to the rule which has been [illegible] regarding state buildings and which provides that no manufactured goods except canned or preserved fruits, vegetables and potted plants will be allowed in these edifices. It may be stated that many states the opinion seems to be entertained that the minor buildings will each be a kind of a state fair on a small scale and that the [illegible] and the choicest pieces of the housewife and the choicest work and embroidery of the maiden who manipulates her fingers in the veranda in the twilight while her mother is washing the supper dishes in the kitchen will all be welcome. The board of control, however, does not look at it in that way and as it has just reaffirmed the rule in question it is not likely to give it if possible a more limiting effect.

Of the plans submitted for the various structures it is apparent that the administration building will tower above all others in its magnificence. Occupying a commanding location in the very center of the grand plaza surrounded by a great lawn embellished with the skill of the best land [illegible] and broad grandiloquent promenades, with an unobstructed view over Lake Michigan, and surmounted by a magnificent gilded dome it will be a thing of beauty and should be allowed to remain upon the grounds as a joy forever. Architecturally it will be in the style of the French Renaissance, carried out in the academic manner of the Ecole des Beaux Arts, and it will cost every cent of the $600,000 that has been appropriated for its erection.

TOO SOLID FLESH.

FAMOUS ACTRESSES WHO WRESTLE WITH EMBONPOINT.

Fanny Davenport, Evelyn Patti, and Lillian Russell and their Methods—Banting—Not Fainting—Not Fasting and Sweat Brings the Desired Result.

Good looks are almost the stock in trade of the wearers of the sock and buskin. Therefore corpulence is fatal to that perennial youth which they are supposed to possess as long as the form retains its slender mien as the face can be made up to look young at the footlights. But as soon as the player begins to stout he and more especially she is obliged either to retire or to take to the impossible parts of mature roles, while those who like Maggie Mitchell and Agnes Booth still keep a girlish figure are accepted in young parts long after they have passed that romantic period of life known as the first youth.

Some actresses have met disease even in their youth witness Fanny Davenport and Lillian Russell. Their light will fat is interesting even to those whose livelihood it not affected or interfered with by their avoirdupois.

About seven years ago Miss Davenport had attained such proportions that she cast about for some means of reducing her weight, and first tried the Banting system. Being tall she could carry off as it is termed, more flesh than a short woman. At the same time a fat La Tosca, Fedora or Camille was hideous and not to be tolerated. Before Banting Miss Davenport used to drink quantities of water and eat bon bons to excess. These two bad habits she abandoned and at once noticed a decrease when weighing. The encouraged her to persevere her experiments further and she turned her attention to the table beginning by cutting off bread, next vegetables and then fat meat. The American Cleopatra drinks nothing but iced tea summer or winter and eats nothing but beef mutton, poultry, eggs and fish no butter, soup or sauces or dessert.

Very hard diet this, but it repaid her by returning some trimness of outline. In her case, however, not even all this dietetic abstemiousness reduced her to the desired minimum of weight. So she gave up her carriage and took to walking. When her time permits she starts out in the morning and walks all day long. At first she used to become so tired as hardly to be able to get through the performance at night, but now she is such a good walker that she could win in a walking match.

There are few, however, who would have the perseverance and the will power to keep long at Miss Davenport's rules for the reduction of adipose tissue. After many trials of the various "anti-fat" modes in vogue, Miss Davenport has struck out three very simple rules, but hard to follow. She says:

"In my opinion, which is the result of some years of experimenting, the only way to become thin, and what is more difficult still, to keep thin is, first, no fluids, second, no food worth speaking of, third, constant walking."

Probably the youngest looking woman of her years on the stage is the famous Adelina Patti. Born in 1843, she is now when nearly 50 years of age, as slender and as well proportioned as when she was but 16. If there be such a thing as inheriting a tendency to corpulence she certainly had that disposition, for her mother was very stout. What occult correspondence there may be between a mother's fat and a daughter's voice, I am not prepared to say, but famous contraltrices of fleshy mothers seem to go in pairs. Adelina's sister Carlotta was fat. So also, I have been told, was her father.

Patti's light and willowy form is due to the trouble she has always taken to keep it so. To this, and to her marvelous voice, all her mature life the great diva has been a slave.

In addition to understanding the importance of rest, sleep, bathing and exercise Patti has reduced her system of eating to a dietary science. Although living principally in hotels, she is never tempted to partake of the rich food provided by them but year in and year out confines herself to the simplest and most monotonous fare.

She never eats fresh bread. It must be toasted dry and hard before she will touch it. In winter she lives mainly on oysters, lean meat and bouillon carefully prepared for her by Nicolini every night after the performance. She takes no dinner upon the days when she is to sing at night. She never drinks ice water but occasionally a little watered claret or lemonade. The great singer avoids all starchy fattening foods such as mealy potatoes, peas, turnips, corn, carrots, beets, macaroni, puddings, pies and cakes, confining herself to lean meat, light soups, green vegetables such as lettuce, celery, dry toasted bread and fruits. She rarely drinks tea or coffee and beer never. She rides as little as possible, exercising on foot all the time her time will permit.

If [illegible] would generally follow Patti's simple and abstemious manner of living they would seldom become too fleshy to appear in youthful roles. Patti has from early girlhood followed this strict regimen, followed into her [illegible] and afterwards [illegible] representative of companies.

The American queen of light opera, Lillian Russell, has at an earlier period of life than most other sucumbed to that bane of hard willing, [illegible] but for her determined and strenuous efforts to reduce her flesh it would soon be said of her as it was of the enormous Duchess Rosa, that she resembles an elephant with a nightingale in its throat.

It is well known that Miss Russell began her professional career in the variety stage. Here she attracted the notice of a manager of a light opera troupe and he offered to give her the leading role in a new opera he was about to produce provided she would train down sufficiently to look the part. That manager was John McCaull and the name of the opera of I remember rightly, The Serpent Charmer. She had one summer in which to learn the role and reduce her weight to the required number of pounds. She succeeded, evolving a course of training which, as the years have gone on and her flesh is obstinate in increasing she has added to until she is able to keep down to 150 pounds. This she regulates to suiting every day. If she finds herself going up in weight she cuts off some fat forming food in which she may have been indulging such as bread and butter, potatoes and sugar. Like Patti she eats only bread that has been dried hard in the oven. Of late years Mrs. Russell has given up her beer, champagne, wine and late suppers, to which, however, she was never inordinately addicted.

That soon after the performance is what has the form and the charm of the professional. It is the meal for which she has once an appetite being fatigued after acting.

Miss Russell retires for keeping hours which are these. She takes a cup of coffee about 11 o'clock in bed. Promptly rises and takes a bath in hot water which is gradually cooled off until it is very cold, after which her maid rubs her down with flesh brushes. Stockings are then put on with flannel bandages, and she takes a light breakfast of fruit, cereals, toast with tea and cream. She starts out for her morning walk, which she continues for two hours, and then she takes a long drive in her carriage. She then takes a light lunch
